INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

The President's Celebration at Woodstock, Conn.

The day of national jubilation was "ushered in" with a sky of promise. Though the atmosphere of the previous day, following the recent scorching period, was like a cold plunge after a Turkish bath, it had done little to chill the ardor of the enthusiastic youth, whose eager thoughts were on Chinese crackers and liliputian bomb-shells, and the glorious impunity of letting them snap and fizz and explode, all day long, without keeping an eye out for the policemen coming round the corner. Long before the sober-sided citizen had thought of relinquishing his night-cap, he was startled from his unpatriotic slumbers by a perfect pandemonium of jubilant sounds. The rattle of drums boldly defiant of any time, or any time but the Fourth of July, the blare of nunmolesome fish-horns, and the multitudinous explosions of peaceful powder, proclaimed that the great birthday of the nation had come. The sky was overcast, but there was no threat of storm, and so long as there was nothing in the weather to render the garb of holiday uncomfortable, or powder an explosive, no one cared to complain of the venerable clerk who is stationed up in the clouds. For an hour or two the restless juveniles had the celebration all to themselves, but before the sun was fairly up there was a stir at the armories, and the trim battalions formed, with their gayest uniforms, and their brightest weapons, for a grand parade in honor of the occasion. Flags were run up on all the public buildings, and every private citizen who could sport a piece of bunting, set it fluttering in the balmy atmosphere, and when the day was fairly started on its triumphant way, the City wore a launty holiday appearance. Shop blinds were not taken down, and the bolts and locks of the stores and banks remained undisturbed even in this restless Metropolis. Everybody was in the streets and bent on a day of pleasure. The public conveyances were decked with streamers; excursion boats, with colors flying, made ready to carry all comers to the scores of parks and picnic grounds which lie about the City, or over the gleaming waters of the bay or the rivers. Some set forth for these pleasure haunts, some sauntered along the noisy streets, each one in his several way determined to enjoy this respite from toil and take some little share in the general rejoicing. A few infatuated beings winded their way to Tammany Hall, leaving the most delightful, breezy day ever vouchsafed to mortals out of doors in the month of July to listen to political harangues, where the virtues of the fathers were glorified and the greatness of the country celebrated by savage onslaughts on the Government and the Administration. This, however, was an insignificant part of the day's proceedings, and the multitude preferred their picnics, their pleasure trips, their rambles about town or the boyish amusements of their paper pyrotechnics. All day a spirit of hilarity prevailed, and the air was noisy with its harmless demonstrations. Of course some forgot the manliness which the day should inspire and even the boyishness which it justifies, in the excesses ever attending a holiday so free from restraints. But "let Hercules do what he may the cat will mew, the dog will have his day;" and there is no reason why respectable people should not have their innocent enjoyments because some do not even know what enjoyment is. With most it was a day of "unrestrained pleasure free."

"And young and old went forth to play
On a sunshine holiday,
Till the livelong daylight failed."

And then eager crowds hastened to the public squares where there were to be music and fireworks. Here, appropriately enough, the festivities wound up with a grand display of pyrotechnics. The great symbolic pieces were let off. The temple of liberty sprang out with fiery columns on its fimsy background of boards and slats.

Gen. WASHINGTON was enveloped in a new glory, mounted on a steed more fier than ever trod the plains. The ship and the locomotive were apotheosized amid a halo of burnt powder, and the soldiers of liberty and the American eagle appeared for a moment before the astonished gazers and then faded into thin air and a few charred sticks. Finally, the whole thing blew up in a shower of rockets, a general glare of Bengal lights and revolving colors, forming a grand transformation scene, surpassed by few and equal to none. The curtain of night came down and the City slept once more.

The Military Parade—A Fine Display.

Agreeably to orders issued by Major-Gen. ALEXANDER SHALER, and his subordinate brigade commanders, the entire First Division National Guard, paraded yesterday morning, in honor of the day. The programme of arrangements was a good one, but for the first time since Gen. SHALER assumed command of the division, the movements of the several regiments were not as prompt as they should have been. The regimental commanders had directed their men to report at the armories at 6 o'clock, or a few minutes before, in order that the commands might reach the brigade rendezvous by 7 o'clock; hence it was that the members were compelled to be early risers.

The orders for the parade had announced that the troops should be assembled in line as follows: The First Brigade, consisting of the First, Twelfth, Twenty-second, Sixty-ninth, Seventy-first and Seventy-sixth Regiments, under command of Gen. WM. WARD, on Broadway, west side, with left resting on Fourteenth-street. The Second Brigade, comprising the Fifth, Sixth, Eleventh, Eighty-fourth and Ninety-sixth Regiments, under Brig.-Gen. LOUIS BUNCE, on the south side of Fourteenth-street and west side of Fifth-avenue, with right resting on University-place. The Third Brigade, consisting of the Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Thirty-seventh and Fifty-ninth Regiments, under command of Brig.-Gen. JOSHUA M. VARIAN, on west side of Fifth-avenue, with right resting on the left of the Second Brigade. The Cavalry Brigade, under Brig.-Gen. BROOKS FORTER, on the left of the Third Brigade. These orders were carried out in good shape, though the regiments were not as prompt in their arrival as they should have been, and the division was not ready for review until near 8 o'clock, these regiments which were the first to arrive, being much injured by the time wasted in waiting for the delinquent commands. The line of troops, when formed, extended from Astor-place up Broadway, through Fourteenth-street and Fifth-avenue up to Twenty-ninth-street, thus making the route of review a very long one.

At 8 o'clock the guns of the section of artillery detailed from Capt. LE MOYNE'S battery, at Union-square, announced the arrival of Major-Gen. IRWIN M. MCDOWELL, commanding the regular forces in the harbor and neighboring forts, he having been invited by Major-Gen. SHALER to review the division in due form. Gen. MCDOWELL was attended by two of his staff, and was received in the manner by the division commander and his full staff. As soon as the necessary courtesies were exchanged between the Generals, the review commenced in regular form. The escort of Gen. MCDOWELL and staff, accompanied by Gen. SHALER and staff, cantered down the line, and received the salutes from the individual commands, was an exhilarating one. The roll of the drums, the crash and swell at the different bands, as the brilliant cortege passed, the cheers, the music of the camp and the martial commands of the Brigadiers and Colonels, followed by the rattle of arms as the regiments came to the "present," gave the spectators an idea of the pomp and circumstance attending military movements, and revived in the minds of those who had worn the "blue" in active service, the memories of the days in camp and on the battle-field. The review in line being concluded, Gen. MCDOWELL proceeded to the corner of Twenty-sixth-street and Madison-avenue, at which point he was to receive the marching salute. Gen. SHALER and his staff galloping down to the head of the leading column to escort it over the prescribed line of march. Having fairly got into motion the division proceeded in regular order down Broadway to Great Jones-street, through Great Jones-street to the Bowery, up the Bowery and Fourth-avenue to Twenty-third-street, through Twenty-third-street to Madison-avenue, and down Madison-avenue to the point of review. The command made a brilliant appearance as a whole, and the men marched very well considering the slippery condition of the pavements, and the presence of railroad tracks over a greater portion of the route, and the parade may be fairly considered a very successful one. We subjoin a brief account of the numbers and appearance of the individual commands. The First Regiment, under Col. PERLEY, paraded in eight companies of eleven files each, and had a soldierly appearance, despite their mixed uniform, which is neither obscure nor brown, but a little of both. The Twelfth, under Col. WARD, in ten companies of twelve files each, made its first appearance in the neat and handsome full dress uniform recently adopted by the members. The new uniform wholly changes the appearance of the Twelfth, so that many did not recognize it. The Twenty-second, under Col. VIELE, paraded in excellent shape, with six companies of twenty files each, the appearance of the regiment being greatly improved by the consolidation. The band and drum corps appeared in their new uniforms. The Sixty-ninth appeared in good style with ten companies of fifteen files each, and is considerably improved in condition. The Seventy-first Regiment, under Col. ROCKAFELLER paraded with nine companies of ten files each, the drum corps appeared in their new scarlet uniforms. The Seventy-ninth Regiment had not received all of their full-dress uniform, the fact disarming criticism. The improvement in organization achieved by the regiment during the war. The "Highlanders" made a soldierly appearance despite these drawbacks, having nine companies of ten files each. The Fifth, under Brig.-Gen. BENDIX, made its usual strong appearance, with ten companies of fifteen files each. The Drum-Major had his corps in front of the regiment, as military, though he very deftly remedied the error just before reaching the reviewing stand. The Sixth paraded in eight companies of thirteen files each, and made a good show, the uniforms being in excellent shape. A Lieutenant of the second company disgraced himself in Fourth-avenue by leaving the ranks and taking a pull of a friend's brandy flask. The Eleventh Regiment had ten companies of fifteen files each, and appeared to excellent advantage, as is usual with this favorite organization. The Drum-Major of this regiment also had his drummers out of place, and failed to head the drum corps of the Sixth. Colonel BUNCE made the change before passing in review. The Eighty-fourth, under Col. DOMBLEMAN, paraded with eight companies of twelve files, the appearance of the regiment being, we are constrained to say, very shabby and slovenly. The discipline of the command seems to be very lax, the men being allowed to come in and out of the ranks seemingly at will. A change in the Drum-Major would be beneficial. The Ninety-sixth had nine companies, of fourteen files each, and made a capital appearance. The Seventh Regiment, under Col. CLARK, paraded with slim ranks, there being ten companies of sixteen files front, though the appearance of the command was all that could be desired. The deliberation of the officers in preparing for the marching salute was commendable, as it carried the battalion past the reviewing officer in splendid shape. The Eighth, under Col. SCOTT, disappointed its friends by appearing in the old fashioned uniform, though the regiment made a good show with ten companies of ten files. The Ninth, under Lieut.-Col. BRAIES, surprised the spectators by its full ranks and improved appearance, there being ten companies with no less than twenty files each, making it the strongest regiment on parade. The new Drum-Major made his first appearance, though the drum corps is not yet complete. The Thirty-seventh, under Col. FREEMOUNT, paraded with five companies of twelve files, and the appearance of the regiment was an exceedingly poor one. The Fifty-fifth, under Col. ALLEN, appeared in nine companies of fourteen files, and had an excellent look. The drum corps is a very fine one. We miss the vivandiere, however, as well as the peculiarly French style this regiment had before the change of dress. The cavalry, under Gen. POSTLY were in tolerable shape. The artillery made a good appearance. As soon as the several brigades had marched past the reviewing officers, they were dismissed on the march, and the different regiments proceeded to their armories and were dismissed. Despite the delays attending the assembling of the troops, the entire review was over by 10 o'clock, and the greater part of the men released from duty, all glad enough to escape from the further heat of the day. The review was a success, and creditable to the division.

Trinity Chimes.

Punctually, according to the announcement, Mr. JAMES E. ATLEE, the well-known artist of Trinity Church, caused those bells in the old steeple to send forth their rich melody. The air was light and pure, and the music from the bells in the tower never seemed sweeter or clearer. At early morning, and again at noon, the following national and other airs were played, to the great delight of all who were within hearing distance:

1. Ringing the changes on eight bells.
2. Hail Columbia.
3. Yankee Doodle.
4. The Land of Promise.
5. Home, Sweet Home.
6. Airs from "Child of the Regiment."
7. Bluebells of Scotland.
8. Bould Sojer Boy.
9. Let the Merry Church Bells Ring.
10. Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean.
11. What Fairy-like Music.
12. Hungarian Waltz.
13. See the Conquering Hero Comes.
14. Red, White and Blue.
15. Yankee Doodle.

We have occasion to know of several families who traveled, some five, and others seven and even eight miles, for the sole purpose of listening to the melodies which came from those bells. Some of these people, it is true, were brought up in English towns, where a chime of bells is no unusual thing. They had never heard the bells of Trinity, and hence they left their homes before the dawn to hear something which would remind them of their early days in Old England. All expressed much satisfaction at what they heard. One enthusiast declared that nothing so good was ever heard on English soil as the "Bould Sojer Boy." The cheering on the street after the playing of "Yankee Doodle," "Hail Columbia," and the "Red, White and Blue," was loud and prolonged.

The Celebration at Tammany Hall—Reading of the Declaration of Independence—Speeches by Hon. Eugene Casserly, Hon. S. S. Cox, and Others—Poem by Hon. John G. Saxe.

Tammany Hall was crowded, yesterday, by an audience assembled to listen to the speeches of prominent Democrats who were announced to be present. Hon. WM. M. TWEED, Grand Sachem, presided, and opened the proceedings with a few remarks, in which he said that he hoped that the words which would be spoken today would sink deep into the hearts of the audience and bear good fruit in the future.

A song—"The Standard of Freedom"—was then sung by Mr. WM. H. DAVIS, after which the Declaration of Independence was read by EDMOND RANDOLPH ROBINSON, a descendant of THOMAS JEFFERSON, and a son-in-law of Hon. JOHN JAY, United States Minister to Austria.

ADDRESS OF HON. EUGENE CASSERLY.

Hon. EUGENE CASSERLY was then introduced by Grand Sachem TWEED as a native of this State and the Senator from the State of California. He was received with enthusiastic cheering, and said, in substance, that the assemblage before him were met to commemorate the glorious anniversary of American independence under circumstances of grave importance, and to renew our vows to the Constitution. This was a day for retrospection of the past, grave consideration of the present, and a glance into the future. There is no hall more proper for this meeting than that of the brethren of St. Tammany. Your City and State have had an honorable record from the revolutionary contest down to the present time. Ardenous duties since I have first addressed you on behalf of my State have been glad to do. I therefore ask your indulgence while I give you some facts from the history of this great State. New-York has always stood firm against usurpations, and in the cause of liberty and the maintenance of the rights of the people in the Union. New-York took the first steps toward the formation of a Constitution of the United States, but at the Convention which met to reorganize the Constitution, the plan presented by Massachusetts was followed. The plan of New-York was the best, and has since been adopted in all the Presidential elections of 1801, the Federal and Democratic Parties were pitted against each other. The Administration of ADAMS had made itself odious by the Alien and Sedition laws. In that contest it was the vote of New-York which decided the election in favor of the Democratic Party, and this Tammany Society organized. In the victory of War of 1812 the navies of England rode triumphant over the seas; commerce was prostrated. There were rich and powerful States which in that hour of peril were not loyal to the Union. There were plans discussed which, if adopted, would have led directly to secession. DANIEL D. TOMPKINS, Governor of this State, came to New-York and asked for aid to raise militia, and obtained what he wanted. That act saved the Republic in her hour of trial and enabled her to come out of the struggle victorious. In the late rebellion New-York was not wanting when the crisis came. At the great meeting in Union-square the die was cast. Other cities and States might not as they chose after that; when New-York moved she moved the continent. To New-York, then, belongs the credit of taking the initiative in that struggle. The speaker said he would not refer to the events of the war. He would, in the future, be glad to let them drop in the memory, and hoped that what may be remembered in honor and affection be remembered, and all else be buried in oblivion. When the war ended the South was in such a condition as to excite the commiseration of the sternest foe. The Republican Party might then have boldly up an organization of the South which would have done credit to it. But instead they put the brand of disfranchisement upon them, and the result we see today. We might have been vanquished in that contest and not them. What would we have said if the terms we have forced upon them were forced upon us? Suppose that Gen. Grant, Gen. FARRAGUT, McCLELLAN, Hood and repeated Sheridan, and put upon them the brand of disfranchisement, we would have replied with an emphatic No! The speaker honored the South for refusing to assent to the terms which were offered them. The Republicans claim that the Southerners are more disloyal now than they were when Lee surrendered at Appomattox. Is this is so, whose fault is it? But it is not so. They may be discontented, but they have reason to be so. These Radical friends of ours curse the South every morning and evening at their prayers, and because the Southerners cling to a party which does not revile them, they are called disloyal. The Radicals have placed the South a secure State government, but have been "dealing" with it State by State. The clause of the Constitution which permits a reconstruction of the Southern States will enable Congress at its pleasure to "deal" with the State of New-York. We have heard the Radical men with ominous significances. [Cries of "Let 'em come; God help them if they do."] The speaker remarked that he hoped that the result of the election soon to come off would give the Radicals such a blow as that they would not have a stomach for any such course. The Radicals have passed amendments under which they propose to regulate your elections by the military. They provide for Circuit Court Commissioners, with power to appoint bailiffs without number, who in turn have power to call out the army and navy of the United States to enforce any order they may issue. If a drunken brawler assaults one of these bailiffs, or any other armed man, the bailiff can order out the military and take possession of the polls. You may think this incredible, but it is nevertheless true. The speaker, in conclusion, referred to the bills in Congress providing for the regulation of the Naturalization laws. The operation of those bills is to make every man who applies for naturalization appear as a criminal from first to last. These bills are not passed yet, and they may not be. The speaker asserted that there was a grave responsibility resting on the Democracy, and it should be met promptly. In reference to the coolie immigration, he said: that the competition of the degraded and debased labor was a wrong ruinous to the working men of the country. He knew of no right which was so sacred as the right of a working man to earn his wages without undue interference. The Radicals have a tariff and tax system which is in every line dripping with the blood of working men. And now they propose to pour into this land a horde of Asiatics, who will take the bread out of the mouths of the working men, and send their families to the poorhouse. The speaker said he looked to the working men to preserve the liberties of the country, and not to capitalists. This is a battle which laborers have to fight for themselves, and not trust to any political party to fight it for them. He had no fears for the course of the Democratic Party in this matter. There was but one party which was free from the thralls of capital, which could take the proper stand in this matter, and that was the Democratic.

The speaker was loudly cheered on closing, and after music by the band, Hon. ANDREW J. GARVEY, acting Grand Sachem in the temporary absence of Hon. WILLIAM M. TWEED, introduced JOHN G. SAXE, of Vermont, who read a humorous poem, which was received with the greatest enthusiasm. The poem is as follows:

POEM BY JOHN G. SAXE.

"OLD TAMMANY."

'Tis the voice of the crooker—I hear him complain,
"Times Tammany here—they are at it again!
Why keep such a feast in a partisan way!
Independence, I'm sure, is a National Day!"
So it is, God be praised, and that is just why
We Democrats honor the Fourth of July!
Were it anything either, or smaller, I ween
We'd all be contented to let it alone,
Or leave it to men—to a party (I'll say)
Accustomed to dealing in a narrower way;
A party peculiarly fitted to shine
(With a rather "blue light") in a different line,
Whose leaders, for instance, (I won't call them
late,
Being buried to soldiers—when cold in their graves)—
Appointed a day (be it tenderly said)
For crowning with flowers the patriot dead.
"Flowers, flowers for our heroes!" (the honor comes
late,
But who can control the caprices of Fate?)
"Flowers, flowers for the soldier!" the demagogues say,
(While weeping a tear that is "all in your eye!")
"One day for the heroes, to memory dear!"
Whom living, they robbed all the days in the year.

And still at the Capital, mark how they treat
The soldier, too noble to cringe at the feet
Of the Dons who determine a General's merit,
By the gauge—nothing else—if his partisan spirit,
More ready to party than reckon much higher
Than service to country; and so they inquire
If he be sound of speech in the radical creed?
And "what has he done, now, for Gen. GRANT?"
"Don't tell me," they say, "of his honors and scars,
But what is the brand of his sword-and-sash?"
"A hit at the Magistrate!" some one exclaims;
Well, I think it does honor, calling his names;
I know his office, and let us reflect,
The head of the nation demands some respect;
I'm not fagging for your Presidential candidate;
In the chair that I sit he's laid on the shelf,
Reviled as he may—as far as I know,
And as to abuse, with the worst I could say,
By giving my game the liveliest play,
I never could hope to accomplish that end
Half so well as I heard a Republican friend.
I'm living, thankfully, proud to subscribe,
Of being, strictly, of neither tribe
Presidential or Denial, as certainly called
Of the office he sought, and therefore omitted
Much that I think, if I dared, I might tell
That one could employ in denouncing his chief.
He said: As I hear it, if you will receive it)
"Pray do not imagine I think you all honest!
Why, I know—I know—I know—there is much in the lack,
But times the big sinner, or begin plain attack,
Like the land-stealing rascals and similar jobbers,
Mr. Recorder, plenipotentiary "Radical" robbers,
Who have made the Republic a Republican hand
That deals in celebrating, an infamous brand,
While their own, at the expense, grown better and fatter,
Are engaged in the Treasury so to the shoulder!

Success to "Old Tammany!" long may she stand
The bulwark of freedom and pride of the land!
Well may her sons, who have come up—and gone down,
In her century's life, have come up—and gone down!
While she, looking on, in her vigilant way,
Poised her lance at her horse, or her hand to the tray
(Ready to serve whichever the occasion might call)
Had a word and a blow in defense of the right!
She aided the triumph of Liberty's cause,
And her motto today is "The Union and Laws!"
Well, when Old England cries out, as she have,
Unabashed by her silence, invaded our shores,
And gave the old lesson repeated so plain,
She scarcely will need to be taught it again!

And when it behoves that the tottering State,
For the wind of disunion that fanned and hate
Throughout the length of the land had been sowing
Was reaping the whirlwind of treason and war,
Still true to the Union, our Tammany stand!
With the "Old Starry Banner" still hung in her hand,
While from her lips ever the cry shall be heard,
And fools in the North were few "secession's" slaves!

"Success to Old Tammany!" therefore, I sing;
(How sweetly she smiles on this festival day!)
In health, strength and beauty, long, long may she stand
The bulwark of Freedom, the pride of the land!

The Chairman then introduced Hon. S. S. COX, of this City, who spoke as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. S. S. COX.

Within the shadow of Tammany, and at its old altar, we meet to dedicate ourselves anew to the Republic. There are hallowed associations here, which give significance to the motto: Fui chrum est bene facere reipublicæ, etiam bene decere tamen in hoc tempore. Already our people are anticipating the celebration of the hundredth year of our Republic. The very fact of its continuance amid the wonderful changes of the century, is a eulogy upon those who have said and done well for its existence. It has withstood the shock of time and the storms of civil conflict, for its foundations were well laid. I rejoice with those who rejoice over this triumph of the Republic. Nor will I chant lamentude of boding about our future fate. Fresh from the national arena, with my mind amazed and depressed at the imminency of perils and the encroachments of power, I still believe in the Republic! The excesses of power have at last aroused the people. From the golden gate, whose silver-tongued orator has spoken to us to-day, to this metropolis of a continent, come notes of awakening and glad tidings of salvation. Our tarnished credit, fame and dignity will be rescued from the spoiler and the plunderer. Nor will I leave the van in the conflict, for she leads the battalions of Democracy! But this struggle for our rescue is not a mere holiday muster. It is no light skirmish, to meet and overwhelm a party, which, by its mercenaries, collects and spends four hundred millions a year! We must credit the vigilance of our foes to this long purse of the enemy is added the fear of his exposure for ten years of rapacity and misrule. We must watch each movement of the Radical janissaries which have seized the powers of the State, and by arbitrary methods turn the very engines of our freedom against us. Upon the States and the people. MONTESQUIEU says that as in Democracies the people seem to act most as they please, "this sort of government has been deemed most free; and the power of the people has been confounded with their freedom." It is true. We may have the temple of freedom, but the spirit is absent from the shrine here, if present, in the form of a deformed and degrading image. It is true that while the greater sovereignty has enjoyed all lesser sovereignties, the Republic still exists. The beautiful evangel of liberty taught by the father of Democracy, THOMAS JEFFERSON, in the Declaration of Independence has been lost in the folds and misapplied in the commentary, that it reads, under Radical light, more like the mummeries of some unearthly craft, than the pure, simple, well-ordered system of restraint and moderation embodied in the local Governments and Federal Constitution of the United States! Usurpation and violence, unfounded and unauthorized, have imitated our system. The present Administration, in its treatment of the South, has not exhibited a single element of charity or brotherhood. The only 'code of amnesty, five years after the end of strife, proposed by a Radical leader, has proved so many executions that they outweigh the little mercies of graces in the first section of his bill of hate. Not only are States held in terror and in thrall by the majority of an omnipotent Congress, but that body is now engaged in showing how in individual liberty it can set aside the bill of rights of the Federal Constitution. A Radical Congressman is thrashed in his district. The gentleman who thrashed him is an Irishman. It was not a breach of privilege, nor for words spoken in debate, nor had it any connection with Congressional duty, or quorum, but the Irishman having asked the man to drink, and having met with a rebuff, struck the Radical Congressman. Congressmen are not gladiators and arrests the assailant. In a case which Judge DOWLING would dispose of in ten minutes, the precious time of the American Congress is taken up, and a citizen is immured in a crypt of the Capitol, because of this assault. Not only is the right of trial by the jury of the vicinage violated in the case of a whole congressional district, but the principle is sought to be established that a Congressman, if a Radical, is a privileged person, a sort of "holier than thou" to be shielded from assault by the Federal power. The assault against the liberty of one is thus made an assault on the liberty of all. In the heat of the greatest affairs of Government, the Radical Party follow in peace the lessons of tyranny it practiced in war. Not satisfied with voting into Congress men never elected, but rejected by thousands of majority, that party would restrict suffrage to the white by laws which, like those of King GEORGE's time, impede naturalization. To make this more galling they connect it with the army and navy so as to affect election by force in certain cities, which, like New-York, have not been educated up to the Radical standard. Even in such matters as salaries, this Administration seems to delight in giving the military about four times the pay. This is then in the exorbitant salaries of the higher military and naval officers, as compared with the salaries of civilians and Judges. EMERSON says that "we ride four times as fast as our fathers did; grind, weave, forge, plant, till and excavate better; and have better shoes, gloves, glasses, gimlets and steam-engines." True; but we have not improved in the economies of our political life. Mr. DAWES proves it. He appealed to the President as the "point star, of economy," and the result was a letter from the War Department read by Gen. BUTLER, assailing him for his efforts to reduce expenditures. He found five hundred and ninety millions in the estimates for 1871, 1872, 1873, the excesses of expenditures over appropriations, and in one department there are sixteen hundred more men employed than the law authorizes. When attention is called to these damaging facts, it is said: "Oh! we are reducing the public debt $240,000,000 a year." Aye, and upon the Treasury claim to be for so doing the people by excessive taxes, not only to fill their own pockets, but to pay off the debt besides. And when driven further for an excuse for the excesses of the over the previous administrations only a week ago, on the 21st of June, Mr. DAWES said that it was but fair to assume that the Treasury estimated thirty-two millions of dollars by mistake. In other words, guessing goes hand in hand with prodigacy. When driven again and again in debate, they at last take refuge in saying, we will reduce taxation. This is only pretense. The very bills for these purposes—like the tariff which passed the House—is an insidious robbery for a steel-patent monopoly and a Connecticut corset company. There will be no substantial, perhaps not even an ostensible reduction of taxation. All your salt, drink, wear and use is taxed to its utmost. This very day you dance on this Fourth of July Fourth per one hundred per cent. to the American Bunting Company of Massachusetts. I have done my part, as have my Democratic colleagues, to reduce the tariff; and I have gone further and sought to abolish all income, stamps and gross receipt taxes, as I thought a frugal Government might be carried on for one hundred million dollars; to which add twenty-five millions for the principal and one hundred and twenty-five millions for the interest of the public debt, thus reducing the taxation one hundred million dollars. I have offered a bill to limit the expenses and to abolish the Internal Revenue system of spies, informers and informers. I have proposed that should be collected thus to the States for collection; thus decentralizing Federal power and abolishing a corrupt fleet of greedy vampires. If the economies of this Administration were confined to the tariff, bounties and land grants it would be tolerable, but we have other exhibitions of schemes and jobs. We have entered upon a new order of military diplomacy for compensation adventurers. The Executive, this aid-de-camp, seeks to annex San Domingo. No matter for Cuba. Let her suffering patriots wrestle in vain. Hurrah for San Domingo! By secret treaty, this Executive agrees to work privately, secretly, with Congressmen for the ratification of the San Domingo treaty! Yet there exists much impeachable and sinister interest. Thaddeus STEVENS and CHARLES SUMNER that scheme of fraud is defeated. It is time the people had something to say about treaties. The grandiose style in which we ushered Mr. BURLINGAME's treaty with China, has given us a pretty little labor question. The party of humanity have encouraged the Chinese to come, and before long it will assuredly be found. The party of protection finds itself unable to protect labor against this advent of paganism. In other words, in fostering Chinese immigration, the Radicals have caught a Tartar! It is the old story. It is as old as the Pilgrim fathers. We know how Massachusetts instituted negro slavery.

History tells us that GEORGE DOWNING, first graduate of Yale College, and a negro, commencing a war with the Indians, as it would yield a crop of red skins who may be exchanged with great profit for negro Moors to be slaves to negro Moors—see, in the work of twenty Indians. Besides he can live also at a cost of fifty cents a week! Thus, Massachusetts! This is the Chinese question over again. It must be remembered that slavery is not a name only, but a fact. Involuntary servitude is the essence of slavery. SAMPSON's seventy-five Chinese are but the forerunners of the clouds yet to come out of Asia. In another century some M. E. Phillips will rise up and say: "The immigration of a Tartar was inevitable, because the Chinese of the nineteenth century were better than their ancestors of the seventeenth. The one confiscated the pelts, traps and wooden spoons of the Pequods—and the Pequods themselves; aye, even hold the son of PHILIPS to the Rack, and wrung from him the secret of his father; while the later century made prices so high by outrageous tariffs, that all production became dear and wages high, and Chinese had to be brought to teach the Africans not to stinks, but to submit. So that, whether we look to folly or domestic affairs—whether to the protection we should give our industry, foreign or in China, or to the protection we owe the poor laborer, or to the protection we owe the African—the Radical Party has become destructive of the end of good government. The Dominican dement passes among the States, order among the people, and economy in the Administration. Public credit is shaken, the currency depreciated and taxpatherer all receive justice. Currency becomes as good as coin; public credit restored properly and gold and silver. No one then can trade in our credit for private gain. As Gov. SEYMOUR one said, Democratic faith seeks to level up. If upon that coin shall ring the hammer of the Democracy, it will place in the palm of labor and shatter the heart of the wounded soldier." Honor, peace and welfare—these will come with the end of proscription against the European emigrant and the Southern citizen. Our grass-grown ship yards will again echo to the sound of labor. Our flag will be crowded with commerce from the furthest east and west. Bribery, fraud, scheming, bounties, &c., will become obsolete, as they were unknown under Democratic rule. The millions of acres of our domain will not be granted to grasping monopolies. The Union in its spirit, as in its form, will be restored. Its power will be measured by the hearts of the States, and no land monopolized which belongs to the people. To bring about such as are the Democratic aim. To bring about such changes we must cling to the ancient altars. Let us adjure each other not merely to speak, but to do well for the Republic. History tells us that when Hannibal, with his legions, on the mountain Republic of Europe—Switzerland! Last year I visited that historic spot, where in low tones and earnest hand-pressures, the confederates of Swiss freedom met to consecrate themselves to their work. It was on the promontory of Grütli, which, amid the palatial scenery of that land where grand mountains mirror themselves in splendid lakes. We swear exclaimed FURST, STAUFFACHER and MELCHTHAL—extending their arms—we swear in the presence of God to live or die for our fellow-countrymen; to undertake and sustain all in common, neither to suffer injustice, nor commit injury; to respect property, and to do no violence to the imperial bailiffs, but to put an end to their tyranny. Tradition says that three springs gushed from the ground beneath their feet, and they flow on to this day, symbolic of pure and perfect freedom. Well might such a miracle follow at such a shrine of manliness and justice. Let us ponder on the altar of St. Tammany on this natal day of freedom, an oath to omit no exertion by deed or word—until the elemental spirits and beautiful form of our constitutional freedom is restored to the Republic, in that simple splendor and unassuming pomp which it wore when our Columbian Order was born.

After Mr. COX's address the Chairman announced that letters had been received from several members of Congress, among whom were Hon. Messrs. THURMAN, MCCREERY, WOOD, ELDRIDGE and Gov. ENGLISH, of Connecticut, and Gov. HOFFMAN, of this State, who, it was expected, would be the next President of the United States.

Hon. JAMES BROOKS then made a few remarks, after which Mr. J. HILL sang "The Star Spangled Banner," and the exercises were closed.

The Veterans of 1812.

The Veterans of 1812 met at Military Hall, No. 193 Bowery, at 1 P. M., yesterday, and partook of a dinner provided for them by their friends. About thirty of the veterans were present. During the last and present years, death has been busy among them, and several familiar faces were missing. Gen. RAYMOND, Col. DAILY and Lieut.-Col. PRYER were, however, on hand, and after partaking of a plain but substantial repast, drinking a few glasses of liquor and smoking a pipe or two, the old soldiers dispersed. Many of them were so feeble that it was with difficulty they could reach the hall.

The Society of the Cincinnati—Election of Officers—Dinner at Delmonico's.

In pursuance of a general order, issued by Hon. HAMILTON FISH, President, and signed by WM. IRVING GRAHAM, Secretary, the New-York State Society of the Cincinnati, held a meeting yesterday at the rooms of the New-York Society Library, No. 67 University-place. A special meeting of the Standing Committee, all the proceedings of which were private, was held at 11 A. M. At 12 o'clock the members met in the large hall and proceeded to elect the following officers for the ensuing year:

President, Hamilton FISH; Vice-President, Wm. S. Popham; Secretary, Wm. Irving Graham; Treasurer, Henry H. Ward; Assistant Treasurer, John Torry, M. D.; Chaplain, Rev. Marcus Hutton, D. D.; Physician, Alexander Clinton, M. D.

Standing Committee—Pierre Van Cortlandt, William Stuart, Wickham Hoffman, William H. Crosby, S. C. Ellis, M. D., Marinus Willet, John W. Francis, Alex. Hamilton, Jr.

Delegates to the General Society—Hon. Hamilton Fish, Wm. S. Popham, Wm. Irving Graham, Henry H. Ward, Rev. Marinus Willet.

Hon. HAMILTON FISH, President of the Society during the preceding years, occupied the chair. The majority of those above-named, and also Gen. J. WATSON WEBB, Col. JOHN COLEMAN, and several members of other State Societies of the Cincinnati, were present. Reports of the Standing Committee, and of the Secretary and Treasurer were read before the meeting, and duly filed. It is proper here to remark that upon its face, this organization seems to be one of the little relics of the aristocracy. Its origin, aims, and objects have been at different times laid before the public through the columns of the Press. We may remark that it was started immediately after the close of the War of the Revolution. Gen. WASHINGTON was the first President of the Society, and continued in the office down to the day of his death. There was only one district at that time, but since then the Society has been divided so that each State has to some extent a separate and distinct organization. At the close of the War of the Revolution the Society was organized on the basis that all the officers of the American Army who survived, should, as a matter of right, entitled to membership, and their descendants after them according to the laws of English primogeniture. Hence the Society has been perpetuated, and possibly may be continued for many years to come. They have certain rules in regard to pronouncing the widows of deceased members, which have been always carried out to the letter, and thus great good has been done. Recently, as we are informed, some widows have died who for many years past relied almost wholly upon the pensions granted by this Society for means to secure comfortable homes and subsistence, when living, and respectable burial when dead. But, being a close and reticent society, the members of which do not like to let their left hands know what their right hands do, we were unable to ascertain any particulars in regard to their schemes of benevolence.

The meeting yesterday was merely of a local private nature. Mr. H. HOGEN was admitted as a new member. After all was concluded, Rev. Dr. HUTTON, the Chaplain, pronounced the benediction, and the members adjourned in a body to partake of a quiet dinner at Delmonico's.

The Day at Bellevue Hospital—Musical Fireworks—Match Making—Running and a Close Shave Generally.

Yesterday morning's sun dawned gloomily for the inmates of Bellevue Hospital. Before it had task to rear behind the hills of New-Jersey, many weary hearts of those confined in their couches by sickness and disease were made to palate anew with enjoyment by the rich treat that had been prepared for their special benefit by WARREN BRESNAN, who, at great expense and labor to himself, together with a few other warm-hearted individuals connected with the Hospital, secured the means with which to accomplish their humane undertaking.

Upon the invitation of Warden BRESNAN, the full band of the First New-York Cavalry, accompanied by Col. BRENNAN and a detachment of the regiment, visited the hospital after the close of the parade and regaled the invalids with the first installment of the programme prepared. All the patients that were able to visit the verandas were said, and those who were unable to leave their couches were brought up to the windows to listen to the music. Several spirited airs were executed, at the close of which Warden BRESNAN stepped forth to the center balcony fronting the river, and thanked Col. BRENNAN and the band for their courtesy in the following manner:

"Col. BRENNAN AND GENTLEMEN OF THE FIRST NEW-YORK CAVALRY: On behalf of the poor patients of this institution, I desire to return you my sincere thanks for this beautiful entertainment. At the same time I hope and trust that the time may come when all of you may enjoy many happy days, so that in some future period you may be able to administer another dose of the same agreeable medicine to those who are compelled by sickness or injuries to seek charity within our walls.

During the afternoon the second portion of the excesses were gone through with, which consisted of a sack-race along the gravel walk in the rear of the hospital. Two patients were detailed to perform this ludicrous task, which they did, amid the shouts of the assembled patients and prisoners from Blackwell's and Bellevue's Island institutions. In the evening Schedler's full band was in attendance on the lawn, and discoursed music while the fire-works, which were many, varied and magnificent, were sent off. They included balloons, rockets, Roman candles, peacocks, and the "Sun of Glory." After the last had exploded Col. BRENNAN addressed the assembled throng of patients in a pleasant manner. He was frequently cheered by his listeners.

The evening's exercises concluded with an old-fashioned "break-down" and cotillions on the lawn, in which all who were able participated, under the floor-managership of Warden BRESNAN.

The Concert at the Central Park.

All day yesterday the Central Park presented a scene of unusual gaiety and animation. Crowds of people sauntered through the shady lanes or rested on the welcome benches. The working man has but few holidays, and yesterday was his greatest. So, like a sensible man, he took himself and his family to the great "breathing spot" of the metropolis, and there old and young enjoyed the comforts of that beautiful spot. Some found relief in a row upon the lakes, others in the comfort of a cheap ride about the grounds. The old arsenal with its wild assaults attracted numbers, and so with walking, riding, rowing and night seeing, all found Money Scarcity—Growth of Atlanta—New Hotel, Railroad Depot, &c.—The Coming Fair—Gambling—The Varieties—Crops, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ATLANTA, Ga., Tuesday, June 28, 1870.

"Money has never been so tight or so scarce as it is now, since the surrender," is the universal cry from the mountains to the seaboard. Planters, mechanics, merchants of all classes and degrees, utter and repeat it so often, having heard it so frequently, and knowing by experience that I cannot collect a cent due to me, while every one to whom I owe anything dins me unmercifully, I should feel fully justified in stating that money is as "tight and scarce," were it not that I find in this wonderful city, that gigantic enterprises, requiring heaps of cash, are entirely prosecuted, and other gigantic enterprises, requiring other heaps of cash, are about to be commenced.

THE GROWTH OF ATLANTA.

I do not know, for I have not examined recently Hayden's Dictionary, the exact figures which represent the sum of the wonders of the world, but if Atlanta is not counted among them, it ought to be. Any one who passed through here five years ago and were to return today, would unhesitatingly admit the justice of this remark. In the Spring of 1865, the Masonic Hall, a couple of churches, and not exceeding half a dozen dwelling-houses, were the only buildings which had not been destroyed. Now the number of buildings is more than twice as great as it was before the war, and their superiority in size and in quality makes their value fully four times as great as it was before the city was burned. On every hand and in every direction solid, costly and handsome improvements are being made, and though everywhere else the scarcity of money is apparent, here there seems to be no lack of currency, or if there is, credit must be abundant. KIMBALL's monster hotel and his works on the Fair grounds give regularly daily employment at the highest rates of wages, to four or five hundred laborers, from the master builder to the negro hod-carrier. This hotel is to be 256 feet square and six stories high, and when completed, according to the present plans, will be one of the largest and finest hotels in the South, not excepting the Galt House in Louisville, Ky. The ground floor is to be devoted to stores, all of which are already rented, and the remaining five stories are to be the hotel, which is to contain "all the modern improvements," including the elevator for people disinclined to walk upstairs. At the present rate of construction, I think it quite safe to predict that the hotel will be completed in time to accommodate visitors to the Fair in October, and I make the announcement with pleasure, because were the visitors to have no other places to live in than the present hotels of Atlanta, they certainly would have but scant comfort. The hotel is to cost $125,000, and from what I have seen of the work everything will be done in the best manner, and none but the best materials employed.

THE STATE FAIR GROUNDS.

Mr. KIMBALL's energy, skill, and money are also working wonders on the rough, rocky and ragged field which is set apart for the Fair ground. The outer fence is already nearly finished. Stump-extractors and hosts of freedmen are rapidly removing the stunted oaks, underbrush, and old stumps which covered the whole space. The trotting-track, half a mile in length, is nearly graded at a cost to the contractor of $20,000. The halls and other buildings for the exhibition are in rapid progress of construction, and from the speed with which the work is being pushed, before the opening day arrives as perfectly arranged a fair ground as any in the United States will be furnished to the State Agricultural Society. The accommodation will be ample for "man and beast," and the means of access for passengers and freight will be abundant by the construction of a double track on the Western and Atlantic Railroad, which runs by the gate of the ground.

OTHER ENTERPRISES.

A few months ago Mr. KIMBALL was by no means popular in this community. His connection with the Opera-house, the attempted sale of that building to the State for a Capitol, and his name being mixed up with the alleged unauthorized drafts of Mr. BULLOCK, made many people suppose that he was a "carpet-bagger" of a very voracious appetite for the public money; but popular sentiment has undergone a revolution, and H. J. KIMBALL, "Yankee" and supposed Radical though he be, is now very widely esteemed; praised for his enterprise and public spirit, and justly regarded as a most useful and valuable citizen. A third "gigantic enterprise is the new railroad depot, which is to be erected and completed by the 10th of October for the accommodation of the five railroads which center here, namely, the Georgia, the Western and Atlantic, the Atlanta and West Point, Macon and Western, and the Air-line Railroads. Hitherto there has been nothing but a leaky, tumble-down little shed made of sheeting and a few rough planks, which would be a disgrace to a way-station in the Rocky Mountains. The new depot will be a very handsome structure of iron, which is to cost $125,000, the contract for which has been awarded to a Philadelphia firm. Its completion before the Fair will be an inestimable advantage to exhibitors and visitors, as well as a lasting gratification—"a joy forever"—to the people of the State, who have a lively recollection of the "old car-shed" on a cold Winter's morning at 4 or 5 o'clock.

ATLANTA A FAST PLACE.

Atlanta is not only an enterprising place, but it may be truthfully called a fast place, not "cribbed, cabined and confined" by those scruples or dread of the law which are found to exist in less progressive communities. A few evenings ago, as I was walking home with a few friends, we heard, at the corner of one of the most public streets and most frequented thoroughfares, a loud noise proceeding from the second door of a house, calling out all sorts of numerical combinations. We looked up, and found that the voice came from a room brilliantly lighted and occupied by a large number of people. Curiosity made us mount the stairs to see what was going on, and, entering without hindrance or inquiry of any sort, we found ourselves in a spacious saloon, filled by a motley crowd sitting at various tables, playing keno, listening attentively to the voice of an individual in his shirt-sleeves at the end of the room, who was busily engaged in jerking wooden balls out of a vibrating arm, and calling out the numbers on these balls, seeing only for a minute or two, when some one of the players called out "keno." Nor was keno the only amusement provided for the patrons of this establishment. They had other means of relaxation. In a corner was a roulette table in full operation. At the end of the room was a most polite individual dealing faro, surrounded by piles of "chips," and a little to one side was a table covered with a cloth, on which were painted a very rampageous horse and various cabalistic devices, at which the game of "horsehead" was being deftly exhibited. Nothing could be more open and above board than this establishment. The law prohibiting these amusements is as clear and definite as that against highway robbery, but it seemed that inter arma, faro, roulette et horsehead, silent leges. Beating a rapid retreat from this place of entertainment, we proceeded immediately to our hotel—a new hotel, just opened—where, at the trifling cost of $4 per diem, we severally enjoyed a fraction of a bed-room and meals which extravagant country would call breakfast, dinner and supper. This hotel is situated on the most fashionable street in the city. Immediately opposite to it is a house devoted to the drama, and called the "Varieties;" and as the warmth of the night obliged us to keep our windows open, and as, for the same reason, the windows of the "Varieties" were also raised, we were enabled, "à la distance," to assist at the peculiar representation, and hear and see all that took place. It was not the "legitimate drama." The entertainment was considerably mixed. The audience or spectators sat promiscuously round the room drinking and smoking, while a number of men and women, accompanied by an asthmatic piano and a strident fiddle sang, danced, tumbled, rolled, and made contortions in utter disregard of decency. I am told that after midnight, when the "play" was finished, dancing was provided for a select few of both sexes, who adopted the peculiar undress of the "Black Crook" performers, as the costume best suited to so sultry a night. After a o'clock, one of my friends was roused by the invitation of the floor manager across the street to "prepare for the next quadrille." "Can such things be, and overcome us like a Summer cloud, without our special wonder?"

THE CROPS.

All am happy to state that the crops are in a most promising condition. Cotton is especially luxuriant, and for the most part well cultivated. The warm days and nights which have succeeded the heavy rains of ten days ago, have given a vigorous start to the young plants, and in a few days the fields will abound with the dark and white blooms—the forerunners of the cotton bolls. The corn crop—so far as it goes—is also in a most healthy condition. In a few days it will be "laid by." The wheat harvest has been unusually abundant, and the quality very good. The wheat harvest is finished, and farmers are now busily engaged in getting it ready for market. The oat crop,, partes to be the larger than was supposed at one time. The rains came in time to save it from destruction.

The Constitution and Candidates for Office—Minority Voting—Troubles of the Democracy—Theological Students—Working Women's Home—Chicago University, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CHICAGO, Thursday, June 30, 1870.

The time for voting on the new Constitution is at hand. There is no little anxiety on the part of its friends as to the result. Not but what they are confident that a large majority of the people of the State are favorable to its adoption, but the fear is that they will not turn out, while its enemies, being interested, will, and thus it will be defeated through default. There has been a good deal of strife for the Supreme Judgeships, created by the new Constitution, and nominations in one or two districts have been made only through much tribulation. It is really wonderful how many first-class jurists there are in almost every town of our State! We have enough to supply every State in the Union. The minority voting article is calling out more opposition than was supposed. The chances for its defeat are good. I notice that one of the leading members of the Convention—Mr. CAMPBELL of McHenry—is opposing it strongly. It is an innovation of which, with all my pronounced tendencies to Radicalism and reform, I have not been able to see either the beauty or utility. It sets out with the assumption that the two parties own all the people, and that there can be no minority unless it belongs to either the Democratic or Republican Party. If the principle is to be adopted at all, let us carry it out, and give all sorts of minorities—even those who do not believe in the Democratic or Republican Party—a chance. A minority of a thousand has as good a claim to representation as a minority of fifteen hundred.

THE DEMOCRACY IN TROUBLE.

The Democracy of this city, although in a hopeless minority, except when aided by a "people's ticket," or some other outside issue, have got into a desperate quarrel. It is personal among the leaders, but it is bitter and vindictive. The Times is at the head of one faction, and late Recorder VAN BUREN of the other. The regular Committee resolved to hold no Judicial Convention. The other section have held one, and made their nominations. The Times pitches into this Convention and into the nominees right and left. It insists that if Recorder VAN BUREN had done his duty while Recorder, his party would not number quite as many as it does, as a large portion of them would have been in Joliet. The fight is an interesting one as it stands, and to help the matter along, a new paper—the Democrat has been established in the interest of those opposed to the rule of the Times. And, by the way, our Republican papers are quite belligerent. It is no doubt a fact that the Tribune is doing the Democratic party a greater service than any of its own organs in the North-west. It opposes and denounces nearly all the leading men and measures of the Republican Party, and its utterances are damaging in the extreme to the Administration. The cause of its singular course is generally ascribed to the fact that its money interests are opposed to the prominent measures required by the good of the country.

THEOLOGICAL.

Chicago ought to become a pious city. We have now no less than six institutions where ministers and priests are prepared for their work. The oldest is the Congregationalist, with about forty students; the Methodist comes next, with thirty-five; then the Presbyterian, formerly belonging to the Old School, with twenty-five; the Baptist, with about fifty; the Unitarian, just getting into operation here, and the Roman Catholic. Chicago is thus becoming a "centre" of theological education unsurpassed in the country. There is a prospect of two others being located here within the next year, as the question of removal has been agitated for some time past. There will be something like fifty graduates this year from all.

A GOOD INSTITUTION.

They have an institution in Chicago which is really a practical benevolence. This is the Working Women's Home. It is not a charity, as is usually understood by that term. Working girls in this city have been troubled to obtain decent and respectable quarters, even at the high charge which was imposed upon them. Five or six years ago several gentlemen conceived the idea of erecting a home, where comfortable quarters, at living rates, could be furnished them. The result was the erection of a large brick building in the West Division, where the girls can obtain good board, pleasant rooms, &c., and at the moderate cost of $3 50 per week; and less where four occupy one room. The usual charge for board, at boarding-houses, is from $5 to $6, with poor accommodations at that. The Home is full, and it is in contemplation to start others.

A CHICAGO MILLIONAIRE.

Many of our old citizens, who have held on to their original purchases, now find themselves men of large property. Dr. Gilmore H. Foster is one of them, and of the oldest, who is now reported to be worth three millions. Getting tired of the trouble of taking care of so large an estate, he, a short time ago, made a partition giving to each of his four children, daughters, $250,000 each. One of them is the wife of FRANKLIN BIRD, Esq., recently United States District-Attorney for Northern Illinois, and who, a few years since, graduated from among the teachers of our Public Schools. Mr. FOSTER has also recently given quite largely to the Unitarian Theological Seminary, now of this city.

CHICAGO UNIVERSITY COMMENCEMENT.

The Commencement exercises of Chicago University have been going forward this week, and closed this evening with a splendid levee at the residence of the President, Rev. J. C. BURROUGHS, D. D. This institution is gradually growing in popular favor, as evidenced by the large registry of students the past year, there having been over three hundred in all the departments. The exercises commenced on Monday evening, with prize declamations by the Freshman Class. On Tuesday evening, Hon. W. B. OGDEN, of railroad fame, delivered a massive address before the literary societies, on the Causes of the Development of the North-west. On Wednesday occurred the "Class Exercises" on the University grounds. This, as every graduate knows, is an occasion on which the Senior Class, about to leave their "Alma Mater," of which we hear so much, are privileged to do and say all sorts of silly, witty, extravagant and ridiculous things. On Thursday, commencing at 10½ o'clock, occurred the regular Commencement exercises, and fifteen young men received their sheepskins as graduates—if that means graduates, of which I have my doubts—of the Universitas Chicagensis.

The examinations of the Law and Divinity Schools have been in progress during the same time. The result of the graduation in fifteen Collegiates, twelve Theological, and thirty-three Law, or sixty graduates altogether. It is a little singular that the graduating classes from the collegiate department of this University should stand so high in the opinion of Eastern men as they do, Brown, Colby, or Rhode Island, commencement a farmer place in point size of the best which he had ever seen graduate from any college. And the best compliment they merit this year by a distinguished college President from New England. I say singular, because it is generally supposed that the new colleges of the West are not very exacting of their students, and that the curriculum is not of a high standard. But such is not the fact so far as Chicago University is concerned. And the Law Department, too, is held in high estimation by our Supreme Court. Prof. BOOTH is about to be transferred to the Bench of the Circuit Court, and it will not be easy to fill his place.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

After several weeks of hot and dry weather, this section of the State was favored, on Tuesday, with refreshing showers. But the drouth has already done irreparable damage to the growing crops, especially hay, oats and potatoes. Corn, we are told, is looking finely, though it has suffered so sore for the want of rain.

MONEY MATTERS.

Our banks have attempted to carry the grain speculators in their efforts to inflate prices beyond their normal state, but they are now retailing the fact that they have quite a heavy dead-load aboard, and some of them are beginning to feel top-heavy. They are now contracting on the speculators as rapidly as they dare, fearing to produce a crash, which will carry grain certificates below the margin. General business is seriously affected by this condition of things.

BOATING AT HARVARD

The Boats and the Boys—The New Boat-House on the Banks of the Charles—Old and New Harvard—The Crew at Practice.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

CAMBRIDGE, Saturday, July 2, 1870.

Having a lot of "booking up" to do at Cambridge about the old University and matters in general, I took the opportunity, the other day, to get a look at the boats and the boys who pull in them. My card and a few words to one of the Club, procured me the most friendly and gentlemanly attention, and a short walk brought me with my conductor to the banks of the Charles. The new boat-house, for which the boys are yet somewhat in debt, though much aided by their theatricals at Horticultural Hall, is about two hundred yards further down stream than the old one which had become utterly rickety and untenable. It is large and airy, and when completed will be both convenient and comfortable—one-half is appropriated to private boats, single or double sculls, and the other half to the University boats. The upper story contains very convenient dressing and bathing rooms, and one large and pleasant hall for a club-room; but this is not fitted up for the present, mainly, I believe, for lack of funds. A broad and lofty balcony gives a fine view up and down the winding Charles. Two or three fine young fellows were "boating" for their morning's practice, and one noble specimen passed me as I stood there, his brown skin shining and "the muscles all a-ripple on his back," as Browning hath it, and getting into his boat pulled off down the river—one of the supplementary men for the Worcester crew, my informant whispered.

OLD AND NEW HARVARDS.

There is a certain tremor of religious awe, a certain glow of manly enthusiasm, which thrills the bosom the first time one in European museums is shown the blood-stained shirt of GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS, or the accoutrements of NAPOLEON or FREDERICK. Somewhat such were my sensations on stepping into the lower room and beholding those noble craft, the Old Harvards, stretched out on their trestles, their smooth cedar and mahogany bottoms gleaming in the morning sun, and their long, needle-like beaks looking even wickeder and more eager in the air than when "spurting" through the placid waters of Quinsigamond. Stretched out on a row of trestles in the adjoining compartment was a queer-looking satyrish of pleiomarian, for all the world like some skeleton head or other fiend from the Howard Museum—a long, tapering creature with countless diaphragms of white pine, which, on examination, turned out to be the new Harvard, while the quaint, pleasant-looking Englishman, carrying at a delicate rib of cedar, near it, was Mr. BLAKIE, the new boat-builder. She was materially shorter, he said, than the old boat, (forty-nine feet instead of fifty-two,) and rather rounder and less elliptical in the floor, but in other regards much the same. Of course she is merely experimental, as Capt. RAND, the modest but determined-looking "boy" of the crew, remarked: "If we don't like her, then we take the old boat," said he, affectionately tapping the smooth side of the veteran of '68, which lay near. This boat, by the way, made the champion time in that year in 17:45, unless I am misinformed. We talked of the training, and the Captain mentioned, as had been hinted once before, that the old severity is much giving way, the main point now being, without slavish rules of any kind, to secure the simply nutritive as any rate.

THE SIX AT PRACTICE.

Just here the noble six began to saunter down the raft, in trowsers, and little or nothing else; and my kind informant with a smiling apology, stepped aside to doff his shoe toggery and take his seat as the bow. Time follows! and the old graduates heart swelled with excusable pride as the young athletes one by one stepped into their places. LYMAN at the stroke-oar, his lean muscular figure remaining one of the struggle at Putney, where he pulled; then JONES, WILLIS, (son of the poet,) then one of the "probable" crew, then HOWELL, and lastly, my plucky, but modest young friend, Capt. RAND. The crew, as he said, could hardly be called in all respects their best, as Commencement came this year before the race, which is not till July 12. Thoughts of home and pleasant Summer scenes have proved too strong in several manly bosoms, and two or three of their best oarsmen threaten to stray on after Commencement beyond recall, while Yale "commencing" just before the race, keeps her men in hand and quiet and fit for the contest. The men were in place, a friendly foot braced against the board carn on the raft. At the low word of command the six flashing spoon-blades bit the water and the good old practice tub shot off down stream at the rate of forty-four to the minute. "Spurting a little, Sir, because there are lookers-on," said my friend smiling as we lounged up the raft and were slowly followed thither, somewhat sadly now his arm's vigor and courage, and manly vigor, and wishing we might all value and guard them sacredly enough in our salad days—"Juventes dum Sumus," as the knurp song hath it.

IOWA.

An Approaching Curious Trial—The Murder of a British Officer on the Missouri in 1867—Evidence Said to be at the Race of it.

From Our Own Correspondent.

SIOUX CITY, Iowa, Wednesday, June 29, 1870.

In the early part of the Summer of 1867, the steamer Octosea was making a trip from St. Louis, Mo., to Fort Benton, Montana Territory, under charge of her owner, Capt. JOHN LA BARGE, now of the steamer Emilie La Barge. Capt. STEARNS, an officer of the British Army, was a passenger on the boat, destined for Fort Benton, from which place he contemplated making an extensive tour through the mountain regions. Capt. STEARNS had seen hard service in India and in the Crimean war, and was on leave of absence, taking the tour for the benefit of his health. He was suffering from wounds received in active service, and the journey had had a marked effect upon his general health. The pure air and the novel scenes of the wild country in the northern portions of the United States through which the Missouri River runs had tended to exhilarate him, and health and vigor were fast returning. He is spoken of as having been a very courteous, affable gentleman, and was apparently very much liked by all of his fellow-passengers. Possessed of ample means, he had devoted a large sum of money to meet the expenses of the projected tour.

On the boat was a detachment of recruits for the United States army in command of an officer. One night, after the boat had passed Fort Buford and was nearing Camp Cooke, the boat was tied up at a place where there was reason to apprehend an Indian attack. (She was tied up to the bank because it is impossible for boats to run by night on the Missouri.) In consequence of the appearances of an assault, a sentinel was stationed at the stern of the boat, with instructions to call any body of men approaching the boat off the shore, and to fire if they refused to halt at the first challenge. Upon this same sentinel the duties of the boat devolved, that is, he was the only person on board, besides the officers, called upon. Several officers of the boat had passed into their state rooms in the stern, and had retired for the night. Capt. STEARNS and Mr. JOHN LA BARGE, one of the pilots of the boat, came up last. Capt. STEARNS was passing to his state-room, while Mr. LA BARGE, who remained a moment to close the hatch over the stairs leading to the texas, noticed the sentinel away from his post, leaning against a corner of the texas. As Capt. STEARNS was in the act of stepping into his room, the sentinel stepped quickly forward, and, without challenging, or giving a word of warning, fired and killed Capt. STEARNS instantly. The soldier was arrested and tried on the boat, before a drum-head court-martial for the offense, but—owing to some technicality, was acquitted and restored to duty. On the trial, the officers of the boat, who were in their rooms in the texas, and Mr. JOHN LA BARGE, the pilot, testified that they heard no challenge. But Gen. BOY. MEREDITH, of Indiana, who, with Gov. GEORGE CLAY SMITH, of Montana, was a passenger on the boat, and who was in the mess cabin below, testified that he heard a challenge.

Naturally, the friends of the deceased were dissatisfied with the result of the trial, and they have, through the British Minister at Washington, obtained a new trial, which is to be this time before the civil Court. On the 27th day of September, 1869, the soldier, private WILLIAM BARRY, of Company E, Thirteenth Infantry, was delivered at Fort Buford, where his company was serving at the time, to the United States Marshal, and he has been in confinement at Yankton, Dakota Territory, ever since. His trial will shortly take place at Yankton, Dakota Territory, in the United States District Court. The British Government, actuated by the zealous regard for the personal rights of its citizens which has always characterized it, has assigned counsel in aid of the prosecution. Gen. MEREDITH, Capt. LA BARGE and others cognizant of the facts have been summoned.

Dark as this mysterious affair appears even at a superficial view, there are circumstances connected with it which lend to it a tragic interest, and make it appear still more dark. It is confidently expected by many that the approaching trial will be the occasion of the unravelling of a great mystery. It is asserted that it will be then proved that BARRY, in firing as he did, without challenge, was acting under orders of the officer commanding the detachment, who is stated to have been of strong Fenian proclivities. This latter statement is made on authority of persons in position to know, with the highest degree of certainty, the facts in the case. The officer is borne upon the Army Register as born in Ireland, and appointed from the army—that is, promoted from the ranks. It is said that he was in a state of intoxication during the major part of the trip.

Private BARRY was a raw recruit at the time of this horrible transaction, having enlisted late in April, 1867. While it might be said that in his zeal to carry out instructions, and thus prove his worth as a soldier, he was led into this terrible mistake, or that he was so ignorant of the duties of a sentinel, that he was unable to perform the duties of one properly, there is evidence to show that he must have known whom he was shooting. His very readiness and ignorance of military discipline, and military duty, may have led him to consider himself bound to obey any order of his commander, even to commit murder; and he may thus have been made a tool to wreak the small, cowardly vengeance of a superior.

Private BARRY became subsequently a good soldier; and is highly spoken of by officers under whom he has served. It is worth noticing to note that these officers express the opinion that he can not be convicted, because he was acting under orders. It is to be hoped that this dark affair may be probed to the bottom, and that the punishment may reach the really guilty party, be his position high or low. M.

CHINA AND ANSON BURLINGAME.

Mr. Low's First Interview with Prince Kung—Sentiments on the Death of Mr. Burlingame—The Value of the Embassy—A Chinese Poem.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PEKIN, Wednesday, April 27, 1870.

The event of the day—that is to say, of this day—is the interview of our new Minister, Mr. LOW, with Prince KUNG, and the presentation of his credentials. It took place without much ceremony, this P. M., at the Tsungli Yamen, or Foreign Office. Mr. LOW, though new to China, as to personal experience, is no stranger to the affairs of this country. He knows that it contradicts all our ideas of Oriental grandeur, and presents us in general with the very reverse of what we should expect to find. But for this he would have been sorely disappointed on being introduced, instead of to a palace, to a cluster of one story offices, built mainly of wood, dingy, dismal, and resembling more a temporary barrack for troops than a rendezvous for the highest officials in the greatest empires of the world. The reception-room is in the style of a Chinese Summer-house, such as we see occasionally in parks and gardens in western countries. It stands in an open space which once was a garden, and looks out on huge masses of artificial rock-work, intended to be picturesque, and is surrounded by excavations originally designed for reservoirs of water, but now converted into receptacles for rubbish. It merits no further description, and the only apology for its shabby appearance is one which I first heard suggested by Sir FREDERICK BRUCE, viz.: that no official is supposed to be anything in such proximity to the Emperor, nor is any public building expected to be grand when in view of the palaces. Of those palaces we see only the glittering roofs at a remote distance. The style of architecture is certainly unique and even imposing. But they are unlike every other part of China if they would not present, on a nearer inspection, a general appearance of decay and dilapidation.

THE PERSONNEL OF THE FOREIGN OFFICE.

The personnel of the Zonion contrasts most favorably with the aspect of its buildings. The high mandarins connected with it are mostly fine-looking men, with features expressive of decided intellect. The Prince, though not imposing in appearance, has agreeable features and an air of intelligence. Of the eight Ministers who, together with the Prince, compose the Council for Foreign Affairs, six were present, dressed in a kind of uniform—long robes of figured satin, and conical caps, trimmed with coral buttons and peacocks' feathers. The Prince wore neither buttons nor feathers, being above the distinctions of rank.

THE DEATH OF MR. BURLINGAME.

After the usual compliments, in the course of which the Prince took a lesson in English, in order that he might be able to wish Mr. LOW "happiness and long life," His Highness adverted to the recent death of Mr. BURLINGAME. He and all the mandarins seemed to have been much affected by that event, and he assured Mr. LOW that the Emperor would signify his sense of the loss by the bestowal of posthumous honors. For this he was only waiting fuller advices from the Chinese Ministers now in Europe. Eight years ago the American Gen. WARD lost his life in the service of China—fighting against the Taeping rebels, on whose prestige he was the first to inflict a fatal blow. The Emperor, grateful for his timely aid, conferred on him a kind of apotheosis, and ordered that temples should be erected to his memory, in which his spirit should be regaled with oblations of daily incense. This sounds rather heathenish, but in China it takes the place of a tomb and a statue in Westminster Abbey. Whether Mr. BURLINGAME be honored with a statue, a tablet, or merely with a public acknowledgment through the official organs, certain it is that he made a profound impression on those officials with whom he came in contact; and that they regard him as having performed signal services for their country. The first of these was his aiding them by his influence with Sir FREDERICK BRUCE in disposing of the Lou-Osborne Flotilla, not only saving them the expense of a "white elephant," but delivering them from the presence of a naval force which might have imperiled their independence. His mission to the Occidental Powers they regard as giving them a source of security better than that of arsenals and forts.

VALUE OF THE EMBASSY.

Whether the sense of security which they derive from managing relations of amity and good understanding will serve the cause of progress in this direction is much doubted. And on the very issue of this question depends the ultimate which is to give the value of the embassy. For my own part, while admitting that a system of forced improvements might be introduced under pressure, I do not believe that they would develop with such a healthy growth as if left to the tardier action of the native mind. Mr. BURLINGAME had to the last a strong conviction that he was serving the cause of progress. In a letter, written but a few days before his death, to his friend and former Secretary, Dr. WILLIAMS, he says:

"All this time, of a darker the storm of opposition which he had to encounter, I was working my life out to secure for the Chinese a fair encounter of human aspirations in treaties made by war—getting American pledged to protect the Chinese in California, England to remain my agents in China from making war without deliberation; securing every where harmonious action in favor of making progress in China possible, by releasing from a system of personal menace. 'Finessed,' he adds, 'my heart though stout and brave, has almost failed me. Me! I recall the Spanish proverb, 'Si hasta hasta merry, but never faint-hearted.' I have faith sustained by more than human power; and, thank God, my faith has had a rich fruition. I have, I hope, done something to awaken an enlightened interest in China—something which will soften upon the Chinese heart and mind; to make them see and feel that there is Christianity in the world."

Such were the high aims and convictions by which he was actuated. Many have charged him with sordid motives in accepting the Chinese Embassy. Let his own words—his dying testimony—in the letter now before me, furnish their refutation:

"I find it," he says, "expensive going about, and keeping up the Mission. I spend all my salary, large as it is, and shall probably not save one cent at the end. What is the best of all, I find by the items that my expenses have been directly for the benefit of the Chinese. This Mission will be worth more to them than fifty men-of-war."

When recording Prince KUNG's allusions to the death of Mr. BURLINGAME, I had no thought of entering on a discussion of his policy or a defense of his character. As to his character, exhibiting the rare combination of high sentiment with indefatigable patience, it breathes in every line of these confidential heart-utterances above quoted. And as to his policy, while passing events may seem to be against it, it is probable that its wisdom would be fully vindicated by the test of time.

A CHINESE POEM.

May I add, without fear of worrying your readers, a translation of a few verses from the Chinese? They were written by an eminent statesman and scholar, TUNGWEN, Minister of Finance, and given to Mr. BURLINGAME on his departure from Pekin. Presented publicly, they expressed the sentiments of all Mr. BURLINGAME's friends in the Chinese Government. This gives them an interest beyond their poetic merit; and they may, therefore, be regarded as a wreath from China to decorate his grave:

"May the breath of the Autumn flowers
Waft your retreating sail!
Yet with festive entertainment
We would a while detain you;
Long have we called thee friend in the Flowery Land;
May we never forget the measures of days of yore.

As the bright moon shines in the midst of Heaven,
Yet we can always behold her;
Though unclouded for ax the East and West,
We can look on it, remember these parting words,
And in spirit meet again.

On the sea the ships go and come again,
In the sky the clouds pass over and return,
Be thou as the moon, shining in myriads of miles,
Even to the utmost bounds of earth.
The best thing will still be to visit us once more."

JAPAN.

A Raid Upon Images—Iconoclastic Tendencies of the Japanese—Land Sales at Yeddo—Tenure of Property—A Gorgeous Display—The Imperial Residence.

The late persecution against native Christians in Japan seems not to have been directed against that faith alone, but against Buddhism also, or in other words, against image worship in general. The Japanese are worshipers of nature; no images are to be found in the temple of what may be called the established religion. Buddhists are as much dissenters from the State religion as are the Christians. Buddhists and Christians alike have images in their temples of worship, and the iconoclastic zeal of the orthodox faith, as by law established, cannot break the mummeries of image worship, whether of Indian or European origin. A remarkable evidence of their determination to utterly abolish idols is shown by an iconoclastic edict, which dooms to destruction even the great idol of the empire, a colossal image of Buddha in bronze, of world-wide fame, called Bibooya. The gigantic statue is for sale, and as it is too large to remove it without breaking it up, it is likely soon to be turned to some useful purpose, after having for six centuries contributed to promote a debasing superstition. The Gazette says these was recently a report that the celebrated Buddhist idol "Daibutz" had been sold to a foreign firm. We cannot vouch for the truth of whether it be so or not; but neither the Japanese officials of whom we have inquired, or the priest at the shrine itself, have heard anything of the kind. We sincerely hope it is untrue.

LAND SALE AT YEDDO.

The Japan Herald of May 21 says: The regulations under which the forthcoming sale of land at Yeddo is to be conducted, together with the form of title deed by which purchasers will hold their lots, were forwarded on the 4th to the British Minister. Below are shown the points in which the present conditions differ from those under which Europeans have hitherto acquired land in this part of Japan, which, though perhaps unobjectionable, seem to indicate the assistance of foreign advice in their compilation. By the first article of the new "arrangements," foreigners may hire houses within a certain limit, and purchase of the Japanese their own premises, for terms not exceeding five years in a lump sum, subject to such charges for road, canal, and river keeping as their native neighbors pay. The next article defines the limits of the land to be sold in lots, the rent of each of which is to be one and a half boos per tsubo, while the reserve price is, according to position, six or eight boos. If more than one bid is required, the Government, if inclined to dispose of any, they may do so on giving one month's notice to the different Consuls. In addition to the rent a yearly cess of or under one-half boo per tsubo may be levied for the provision of an European Police force. If the purchaser does not pay his rent or cess, it is on any transfer of the property, a suit may be instituted against him before his Consul, and in the event of his being cast the authorities will be entitled both to the amount due, interest thereon at two per cent per month, and costs of suit. But there is no provision that the purchaser shall conform to any building regulations, such as are inserted in the old title deeds; nor is there any such stipulation as before existed that the house built on the lots shall be substantially erected of stone, brick or thick plaster, and tiled. The authorities agree to keep in good repair the sea and canal walls; to drain, light and repair the streets; but there is no mention of the cost of doing this, if possible or otherwise, so that purchasers choose they get a distinct understanding—they probably be left to indulge in the pleasures of hope for an indefinite period. The conditions of sale are pretty much the same. Each bid is to be made in an audible voice; the auctioneer is inhibited himself from bidding on lots; each bidder is to pay down 400 boos per tsubo on the fall of the hammer, which will be forfeited in the event of non-completion of purchase. The sale takes place on the 2d of June, and delivery of title deed must be taken on the 1st of July, thus allowing a fortnight less than formerly for speculative purchases to "seize the wind." By way of finale to the whole of the "arrangements" the Japanese Government kindly promises to "consider" any propositions hereafter brought forward by the foreign representatives for the municipal government of the foreign settlement at Yeddo, in a similar manner to that extant at Kobe and Osaki. It might be thought that this proposition would best emanate from the residents themselves, seeing the transitory nature of foreign representatives, and on this point much may be said.

A REVIEW BY THE MIKADO.

On the 26th of May there was a grand review of Japanese troops that have been drilled after the European system, at a place called Comaba, about seven or eight miles from the citadel. The Mikado honored the review with his presence on the ground. The line of route from the Palace along the Aomyami road was crowded with Japanese, who, in their best holiday attire, turned out to get a glimpse of the Tenno as he passed on horseback, returning in his norimon; perfect order was preserved, and the road kept clear by numerous daimios' retainers stationed for that purpose. Doors and windows were closed and sealed, but the spectators squatted on the mats in their open shops and in the streets at their ease. There were quite a number of tents for the men, with the banners of the various princes and regiments flying above them—and also numerous pavilions for the high officials—one for the accommodation of foreign spectators, and a very handsome raised pavilion-like small temple for the Mikado. The day was very fine, and the site well chosen for the pageant, altogether making a gay scene. The movements were very carefully gone through—particularly by the artillery—but a want of uniformity, confidence, and steadiness was painfully visible. The French method seems to predominate, they all others as yet, but, as in all matters connected with the natives, there seems to be an entire absence of thorough knowledge and practice of the rudiments, the tirailleur loose-order and squad drill evidently being hurried over to rush into company drill, and thence into close-order difficult movements. There was to be seen on the ground remnants of nearly all the Princes who supported the new régime, as infantry, a couple of half batteries of small brass rifled howitzers, and about 150 horsemen, some with lances and pennons. Altogether, the number of troops on the ground amounted to some 1,200 or 1,500 men. The spectators were more than double, and consisting principally of the élite of Yeddo.

THE IMPERIAL RESIDENCE.

Yeddo was the seat of actual Government in the days of the Tycoons, and we suppose it is to continue so for as now, as the Emperor appears to have taken up his permanent abode there, and all his decrees are issued from thence. There has also been for a long time past a talk of removing the British Legation from Yokohama to Yeddo, that the Minister may reside there permanently, instead of going backward and forward so frequently as he is obliged to do. This change would not be even under consideration, unless there were an intention that Yeddo—under its new name, Tokio, the Eastern Capital—should continue to be the seat of power.

VARIOUS MATTERS.

The interminable Schumann case has been appealed to the Secretary of State at Washington. The private creditor by defendants are the payment of all costs out of the estate, and the reduction of the damages assessed for house, wages and hospital. A great Japanese fête, called "Matsuri," has occupied the native community for the past week, and foreign boat and horse races are to fill the coming week. A defalcation has been discovered in the Quartermaster's Department of the British Navy. Bundles supposed to contain clothing, have turned to be only saw-dust. An investigation is being held. Of the Embassy of three sent by the Japanese Government to Cuba, one was killed and the other two have returned. Rumors of war are the consequence. No news has been received from Owashima, and found nothing further done with the wreck. A great contest is going on between American and English claimants to the franchise for a railroad between Yeddo and Yokohama, the Americans having the prior grant, but from the old Government; the English grant is from the present Government and over the same route. The representatives of both governments are exceedingly active in the matter. No further developments are made known in regard to the attempt upon the life of the American Consul at Yeddo. A guard is constantly kept at his quarters. Recently some enterprising native merchants put two small steamers upon the Yodogawa, which gave much great offence to the river boatmen, that they collected in great numbers and broke up the steamers.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Travelers and the United States Custom-House.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Allow me to address you relative to the new and absurd regulations of the United States Customs authorities upon travelers' baggage. In justice to our citizens traveling abroad, an official copy of the recent order should be sent to the principal English and Continental hotels, so that people might see at a glance what article they are entitled to take to America free of duty. The practice of imposing duties on souvenirs of travel brought in by passengers—small articles, intended as presents for their friends, is contemptible in the extreme, and unworthy of such a great Government as that of the United States. Its action in this respect is in marked contrast to that of what we call the "despotisms" of Europe. I have no doubt, on the other hand, that the United States Government is victimized by professional smugglers, but it is manifestly unjust and unfair to the great body of our citizens traveling abroad, that they should be looked upon as smugglers by the Government immediately upon setting foot on the dock in New-York or Jersey City. I will venture to say that you may travel from one end of Europe to the other and nothing further will be required of you at the frontiers than a simple declaration as to whether you have dutiable goods or not—subject of course to the right of search. In England noticeably the declaration of Americans arriving is admitted as truth. In his own country the American citizen is obliged to take his Bible-oath and then, in nine cases out of ten, the authorities look upon him as a liar and a smuggler. When will our Government see that these absurd regulations only give an impetus to the operations of professional smugglers, and serve to exasperate, annoy and worry passengers who have not the slightest idea of defrauding it to the extent of one cent, and who find it hard to realize the fact that the United States Government is the freest and most liberal on the face of the earth. They incline to think that the despotisms of Europe are not so despotic as they had been led to suppose, and that there are despots on this side as well as on the eastern side of the Atlantic. F. T. EUROPEAN MAIL NEWS.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAM-SHIP CITY OF BROOKLYN.

The steam-ship City of Brooklyn, from Liverpool June 22 and Queenstown June 24, arrived at this port yesterday. The news by this arrival is two days later than that brought by the Hippo and the Malta.

The Swiss Federal Assembly was convoked for the 4th of July. The treaty concluded between Switzerland and Italy for the piercing of the St. Gothard is to be submitted to it at an early sitting for ratification.

We have to announce the death of M. JULES DE GONCOURT, at his residence at Auteuil, France, in the forty-ninth year of his age. He and his brother EDMOND had written together a number of semi-historical works and some theatrical pieces.

Subscriptions have been opened in Italy to raise monuments to SAVONAROLA, the great preacher of Ferrara, and to HOPOLI, Milanese, who published at Parma, at the end of the last century, splendid editions of the classics, now much sought after by book collectors.

The excessive heat of the weather in England combined with the exposure to the glowing heat of the furnaces caused a number of men in the iron works in the South Staffordshire district to leave their work recently. It is stated that a number of the puddling furnaces will be let down till the weather becomes cooler again.

"Count FAUL DE DEMIDOFF," says the Liberté, "is at present endeavoring to obtain from the Emperor ALEXANDER, permission to assume the title of Prince de San-Donato, which his late uncle had enjoyed. The Czar, however, is not much disposed to recognize the assumption of foreign titles by Russian subjects."

The Gaulois reports a short conversation which took place the other day at Ascot, between the Princess of Wales and a French attaché, who was over-elated at the victory of Sornette. "That admirable race, Madame," said he, "revenged us for Waterloo." "True," answered the Princess, "but at Waterloo you ran better still."

The Bourse Gazette of St. Petersburg states that a report made to the Czar by the Minister of War, shows that Russia possesses at present 866,333 needle-guns, and that the fabrication of metallic cartridges has reached 300,000 a day, giving a total in hand of 15,000,000.

Extract sixteen, says the London Standard, of June 23, of the correspondence respecting the capture and murder by brigands of British and Italian subjects, has been published yesterday. It contains the conclusion of the evidence of the trial of seven brigands of the ARVANITAKI band held before the Athens Court of Assizes on the 21st and 22d of May. The brigands were all found guilty and sentenced to death. The prisoners were further condemned in costs. The President told the prisoners that they might enter an appeal to the Court of Cassation within five days of the date of their conviction. The condemned are all under thirty years of age.

The card published by Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL in the London papers relating to the completion of The Mystery of Edwin Drood is followed by a letter to the effect that erroneous reports are in circulation respecting The Mystery of Edwin Drood, the novel on which Mr. DICKENS was at work when he died. It has been suggested that the tale is to be finished by other hands. We hope you will allow us to state in your columns that Mr. DICKENS has left behind him materials sufficient in addition to those already published, this being one-half of the story as it was intended to be written. These numbers will be published, and the fragment will as remain. No other writer could be permitted by us to complete the work which Mr. DICKENS has left.

Recent correspondence between the Government and the Governors of the Bank of England, according to the city article of the London Times, indicates a step in the right direction toward accomplishing the withdrawal of the light gold coin now in circulation. The bank has hitherto been able to allow only £2 17s. 9½d. per ounce for light gold. They have now given notice that they will be prepared in future to receive it at the rate of £3 17s. 9d. per ounce. It has been an undoubted hardship on bankers and the last holders of light sovereigns that they have had to bear a loss of 4d. an ounce, in addition to the loss in the weight, but the Mint, by its regulation, has sanctioned for mitigating this hardship will remove any plausible pretext for future systematic evasion of the law. The bank has also given notice that the following are the prices at which they are now buying foreign gold coins, viz.: United States gold coin at £3 18s. per ounce; French do., £3 14s. 3½d.; Russian do., £3 17s. 7½d.

The journals of Verviers, in Belgium, give some details concerning the disorders which have taken place in that town. Some young men of the militia who had been called out for exercise, accompanied by some workmen of the Exposition, paraded the streets singing a breaking drums, and succeeded in a red flag bearing the words, "Victims of the tax of blood." In passing before the police-station they sang the "Marseillaise," when three agents of the public force came out, and, after unsuccessfully calling on the rioters to disperse, seized the flag and carried it off. The rioters then procured a piece of stuff of the same color and hoisting it on a stick, again showed themselves, in defiance, before the Police office. The agents, who were then only eight in number, attempted to compel the mob to disperse, and, being attacked, were forced to draw their swords. The conflict became serious, the Police, being quite outnumbered, were ill-treated. Several of them were disarmed and then wounded with their own weapons; they, however, succeeded in arresting three of the rioters, but two agents were dangerously hurt. The mob then retired, and a party of gendarmes arrived to assist the agents.

The Memorial Diplomatique says that the persecution with which the Catholics of Poland have been visited, has now been extended to the Baltic Provinces of Russia. All public functionaries belonging to the Reformed Church are compelled to attend all the religious solemnities celebrated in the Russian churches in honor of the Greek Church, and the members of the Imperial family. They have in vain represented that they perform those religious duties in their own places of worship, and they have been informed that the Greek faith being that of the State, they must attend all solemn ceremonies the object of which is to implore the Divine blessing on the reigning family of Russia, on the occasion of the last celebration of the Emperor's birth-day, the Governor of Riga, in order to ascertain whether all the Protestant functionaries had really been present at the Te Deum, gave notice that immediately after the religious ceremony he would, on behalf of the Emperor, receive the congratulations of the civil and military authorities. The proceedings thus sought to be carried out to the detriment of their co-religionists, has greatly excited the French Protestants, and a member of the Evangelical Consistory of Paris, M. DE PRESSENSÉ, has ventured to address himself directly to the Emperor, in the hope of securing to the Protestants of the Baltic Provinces the liberty of conscience which they had been promised. The Czar received the petition at Ems, and he said in reply to M. DE PRESSENSÉ, that if that gentleman chose to visit him during his stay in Germany, his Majesty would be willing to see him. Acting upon this invitation, M. DE PRESSENSÉ has proceeded to Langenalba, near Darmstadt, where the Emperor has lately been staying.

In the papers in the case instituted by Mr. TENNYSON and Messrs. SUTHERLAND & CO., publishers, in the Court of Session, Edinburgh, to recover damages from Mr. ROBERT FORRESTER, Stockwell-street, Glasgow, one of the bookselling firms who were interdicted by a recently granted, restraining them from selling copies of Mr. TENNYSON's works printed in foreign countries, it is stated that Mr. TENNYSON is the proprietor of the copyright of the whole of his poetical works, and is entered as such in Stationers' Hall. The other pursuers, Messrs. ALEXANDER STRAHAN & CO., carrying on business as publishers in London and Edinburgh, have acquired, by agreement with Mr. TENNYSON, the sole and exclusive right to print and publish the works within the British dominions for five years, from the 1st of January, 1869, the whole of which works were first composed, written and printed within the United Kingdom. It is then alleged that, in violation of the law of copyright, and of the contract, the pursuers in the works, "the defender, in the months of December, 1869, and January and February, 1870, imported, or caused to be imported, into this country, for sale or hire, copies of the works reprinted in a place out of the British dominions, or knowingly sold, published, or exposed them to sale within his place of business. It is stated that the reprints were printed in the United States, and published in Boston by FIELDS, OSGOOD & CO., Boston. The pursuers say that they have suffered pecuniary loss and damage by the defender's conduct, the copyright of the works being a property of very great value. The damages are laid at £500.

MR. DISRAELI AND BLACKWOOD.

A Note in the Review of "Lothair"—The Critic's Explanation of the Allusion to the Authors Bible.

(From the London Standard, June 23.)

A second edition of Blackwood's Magazine for June has been published, with a note of four pages to the review of Lothair. It is occupied chiefly with extracts from, and a running commentary on, the articles to which many newspapers, both in town and country, have attributed Mr. DISRAELI's disclaimer. The most interesting part of the rejoinder is that in which the critic in Blackwood explains and justifies his allusion to Mr. DISRAELI's page: "One grand count of the indictment against me is, that, in alluding to things Jewish, we have rendered our article personal and offensive to Mr. DISRAELI. Now, we should have said just what we have said if Mr. DISRAELI traced his pedigree to HAROLD or WILLIAM the Conqueror; for it is not the man of Jewish descent, but the champion of Hebrew pre-eminence, perfection, and other nonsensical pretensions, who has been the object of our allusions. The most conspicuous feature in some of his later novels has been the asserted superiority of the Jews to all other people. To talk of this, in discussing his merits as an author is no more personal than to mention heroes of Jacobin connection with CARLYLE, or certain fantastic theories of art in reviewing Mr. RUSKIN. We have spoken of Mr. DISRAELI in the character in which it is his pleasure to deport himself, and in which he is universally recognizable by all who ever heard of him. For a number of a century his satirists have depicted him with pen and pencil under Jewish mask, dance and write Jewish peculiarities of costume. The whole meaning of the mock novel of Coningsby vanishes if the Jewish element be ignored. In that parody, a vendee of old clothes, cheap pen-knives, and similar wares, inhabits a palace filled with fabulous delights, and plays a game on a little harp, peculiar to his nation. This is the Jew that Shamarah knows. And how the critics, who have been too busy chuckling over and repeating ridicule of this sort, suddenly discover that we, from whose mouths nobody can derive the remotest hint of anything concerning Mr. DISRAELI's private life, are guilty of gross personality. Do they think the Jew-name is now so sacred that, without it, there shall be no more cakes and ale? Yes, by St. Aunt! and ginger shall still be hot in the mouth, though they may prefer to offer their readers sawdust."

From the Echo, June 23.

The critic of Lothair, in Blackwood's Magazine will not take much by his anonymous note, published yesterday in the second edition of the current number. There was no need to vindicate the right of a reviewer to publish a rather shallow and quasi-facetious review of even an Right Hon. Minister's novel. This never was the question. The charge was that the article, actuated by political and personal motives, contained a gross libel, in the seven-out taunt of "old clo" at Mr. DISRAELI, and that in doing so he was guilty of something very like blasphemy. On these points the criticism is singularly weak. The reviewer says that he did not refer to the "old clo" because Mr. DISRAELI was of Jewish extraction, but because he was the "champion of Hebrew pre-eminence, perfection, and other nonsensical pretensions." If that were all, the reviewer would be singularly foolish to bring forward the subject a quarter of a century after the whole world had forgotten it, it was precisely were published, and while reviewing a book which contains absolutely no reference at the "ridiculous pretensions." As to the insinuation that Mr. DISRAELI urges put himself forward as the Jewish Messiah, the reviewer attempts to vindicate his good taste by saying that he, as a Christian, of course does not believe in the Jewish Messiah, the reviewer be an old Jew or Christian who does not believe in the Jewish Messiah, whom Mr. DISRAELI, in common with all Christians, considers to have been the founder of the Christian religion; but, in any case, to make an old exclamation founded on even a misreading of Old Testament prophecy is simply charming and disrespectful. We hope that the pages of Blackwood should have been so stained.

RAILWAY DISASTER.

The Accident on the Great Northern Railway in England—Particulars of the Terrible Disaster.

From the London Standard, June 23.

A general goods train from the north was proceeding at the rate of sixteen to twenty miles per hour past Newark Station, on the main up line of the Great Northern, when, on passing under Claypole Bridge, half a mile from the station, the axle of a six-ton truck, belonging to the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Company, which formed part of the train, broke. The immediate consequence appears to have been to throw this truck, on the left-hand side of the up-line at the very moment when the Yorkshire excursion train of thirty carriages, conveying 600 or 800 persons from London, ran up at the rate of between twenty and thirty miles an hour. The engine of the passenger train seems to have bounded off the line, struck the embankment, and then proceeded onward for two without regaining the rails, and to have dashed on with the train behind it, partly on and partly off the way, and under the bridge, the engine itself or one of the carriages clipping a piece of stone off the buttress as it passed. For fifty yards or more the engine, a locomotive of great weight, and the carriages immediately behind jolted and bumped along off the sleepers. Then the engine having left the way, darted off to the embankment on the left, struck the bank, and turned completely over. Nearly, if not quite, half the train was thrown off the rails, thrown over and about the prostrate locomotive. The latter half, consisting of fifteen or sixteen carriages, had not detached, and remained on the rails. The whole of the other carriages were, by the force of the impetus, driven over and into each other in one general wreck, piled high by the wayside rather than scattered around. A brook runs at the foot of the embankment of the railway; and a greek bank, surmounted by a thin iron fence, marked the Company's land off from a small pasture field adjoining.

HEART-RENDING SCENES.

Here, at 1½ o'clock, the quiet of the Summer morning in the country was broken by the horrid roar of the overturned engine and by the cries and groans of wounded persons. Naturally, the passengers in the after-part of the train were in the greatest consternation, and to run down to Newark and scour the district for further aid. Adequate help, both surgical and mechanical, appears to have been got together as promptly as could be expected at so untimely an hour. Still the agony of the sufferers was in some cases necessarily protracted. Mr. C. A. WILSON, a medical of Leeds, acted with remarkable presence of mind. This gentleman was seated in a compartment with one lady and four gentlemen. He felt then a bump, saw the lamp shake, felt the train off the line, and the next instant found himself almost buried, he knew not where. Recovering himself, he found he was pollioned, he discovered that he was tightly held by a heavy weight of timber pressing on his ankle and hip. Overhead and around him were broken planks and splinters. A good deal of this he managed to clear away, but he was quite unable to extricate his leg. On all sides he heard the cries of the wounded. He could give no help, but, with unfortunate promptitude, he called out to the distance; until, others in greater danger than himself were relieved. The circumstances were trying, because, as Mr. WILSON found, while his ankle was fast held, one knee was bent on the chest of a gentleman below him—one who had sat in the same carriage, a friend whom he knew, and who had unfortunately urged him to carnantly to "sing out." Groping about in the as his outstretched hands could reach, Mr. WILSON felt and saw the arms of a lady. Withdrawing his hands, he found them stained with blood. The lady was Mrs. ROBINSON, who had sat in the next seat of the carriage, and was necessarily in the same position. For two hours did she and his friend below remain firmly held in the grip of the heavy timber pressing on them.

RELIEF AT LAST.

When at length the workmen got to them, Mr. WILSON directed their operations, and, after danger from misapplied leverage, and an accidental and probably well-meant blow on the head from a crowbar, he and the man beneath were liberated. Mr. WILSON's ankle was believed to be broken, but it is happily whole, though bruised and lacerated. Many other incidents of a more or less severe nature marked the scene before all the wounded were cleared off to Newark or sent on to their homes. It would appear that the truck which caused the accident remained attached to the fore part of the train after it struck the excursion engine, and was drawn a distance of 300 yards after it was thrown off the rails. The engine and it was thrown off, while several trucks in the rear of it were scattered about at the first shock, two being overturned into a pool of stagnant water on the London side of the bridge. It is fortunate that nothing particularly inflammable or explosive was in the goods train, and that the engine did not run full bit against the buttress of the bridge, and so render the wreck of the train even more complete than it has been. Gangs of men are still employed in clearing away the débris, and as every train, whether to or from London, passes the spot, the carriage windows are filled with the heads of passengers endeavoring to get a glimpse of the scene of the accident.

THE FATAL RESULTS.

Two more deaths have occurred since Tuesday. One is that of THOMAS MARSHALL, the other of the infant daughter of Mrs. HADDOCK, aged thirteen months. It is believed that the mother threw the child out of the window in the hope of saving its life. Its arm was fractured, and it was otherwise so seriously injured that it expired yesterday. Mrs. HADDOCK, the mother, was killed in the accident. The numbers of the dead is now sixteen, all of whom were identified by relations who had come up, already from the neighborhood of Leeds, for that purpose. Several of the principal officials of the Great Northern Railway Company are in attendance, and it is expected that a full investigation of the matter will be opened before the Coroner and the Government Inspector on Friday. The patients in the hospital are reported to be doing well, and are pronounced to be out of danger. Two or three rather critical cases are still to be found, but the majority of the wounded of the less seriously injured of the sufferers have returned to their homes. All are agreed that the Newarkers and people of Newark have treated them kindly.

Fatal Accident on the Erie Railroad.

An accident occurred to five coal cars of a freight train, yesterday morning, at Washingtonville, Orange County, on the Newburg branch of the Erie Railway, in which a brakeman named JONATHAN CROWELL was instantly killed. In going down the grade at that place his engine broke in two, and the cars came violently together, breaking up the five coal dumps, and blocking up the track, causing some the a number of hours. CROWELL, who was badly mutilated, left a wife and several children, and resided at Port Jervis.

FREE LABOR BUREAU.

Operations of the New System—An Abundance of Male and of Female Help.

It is well known by the readers of the TIMES that there has been in operation in this City since June 15, 1869, a Free Labor and Intelligence Bureau, organized, under the act of the Legislature of 1866, by the Commissioners of Charities and Correction, and sustained by them. Here any servant, male or female, can register his or her name, and be tolerably certain of being employed in a very short time. The establishment is under the charge of Mr. JAMES DONAHUE, who is assisted by nine clerks, and appears to be conducted in a thoroughly systematic manner.

THE FIGURES.

The following table will show the number of persons who have obtained employment at this Bureau during the first year of its organization:

June 15 to July 15, 1869	1,800	January, 1870	2,322
August, 1869	2,248	February, 1870	2,124
September, 1869	2,722	March, 1870	2,[illegible]
October, 1869	2,074	April, 1870	2,[illegible]
November, 1869	1,628	May, 1870	2,[illegible]
December, 1869	1,[illegible]	June, 1870	2,[illegible]
Total			24,[illegible]

The majority of these persons were servants, and sixty per cent of the whole were females. Of the nationalities the natives of Ireland were greatly in the majority. There were very few Germans or Scotch, and a very small number were Indians.

THE LOCATION.

The Bureau was formerly located in the Pilmpton Building, but was removed on the 1st of May to Nos. 4 and 6 Pinkney-place, which has been fitted up for the purposes of the Bureau. The apartments on the first floor are devoted to offices and reception-rooms, and a one-story extension has been devoted for the accommodation of male laborers and land hands who, having registered their names for employment, depart to their homes or boarding-houses and await a message, or call again for an answer to their application. The building is admirably suited for the business, being quite central in location, and the apartments large. On the second floor are waiting-rooms where the female servants sit on benches ranged around, and await their turn for being called.

THE RULES FOR SERVANTS.

The office is open daily, Sundays excepted, from 8 A. M. to 6 P. M. from April 1 to Nov. 1, and from 8 A. M. to 5 P. M. during the remainder of the year. Books are kept in which are recorded the names of applicants for employment, their residence, the time they have been in the United States and in the City, their place of birth, married or single, the number of persons dependent upon them and their trade or occupation; also books in which are recorded the names and addresses of persons applying for labor, the kind of labor required and the price or wages proposed to be paid.

No fee from either applicants for employment or for labor is on any pretence demanded. In the female department a reception-room is provided for those seeking employment, and a sitting-room for those desirous of employing them.

REGULATIONS FOR EMPLOYERS.

With a view of facilitating business, and protecting alike the interest of the employer and employee, the following rules have been adopted for their government:

Persons desirous of obtaining situations are required, upon application, to register their names. A ticket being furnished them, they are directed to the sitting-room, and seated in numerical order, the lady at the link having preference for the situation offered.

A book is kept in which are recorded the names of any parties using disrespectful or improper language, or failing to keep an engagement after being engaged, which thenceforth debars them from the privileges of the office.

THE MODUS OPERANDI.

Persons seeking help, upon registering their names, are shown to the reception-room and seated in numerical order, their request written on a slip of paper and posted on the bulletin. The moment a person in want of a servant comes for instance, that a cook is wanted. The first girl on the line, who claims to be a cook, is then sent to the reception-room, where she confers with the applicant. If engaged, her name, as engaged, is entered on the engagement register, opposite the name of the person engaging. Care is taken to prevent improper persons obtaining help at this Bureau.

WRONGS REDRESSED.

Instances have occurred in which parties engaging help have discharged them before the expiration of the month. On complaint being made at the Bureau, a written request for the payment of the wages has generally been successful. Where payment has still been refused, a record is made against the person's name, which debars that person from obtaining help from the Bureau again.

SUCCESS OF THE BUREAU.

The following extract from the report of Mr. G. M. LOSEE, Mr. DONAHUE's predecessor, showing the operations of the Bureau for the first six months of its existence, will exhibit the success which attended the undertaking almost immediately upon its inception:

Of the aggregate number of applications by employers, nearly one-half were required for ordinary house-workers, the remainder requiring help for the higher grades of household duties. During the Summer and Fall months girls demanded high wages, and are very independent. The supply at the present time being much greater than the demand, and the times being very dull, they are willing to accept places at more reasonable terms, which accounts for a greater proportion provided. Of the aggregate number of females seeking employment, fifty per cent. desired situations in the higher grades of household duties. During the existence of this institution all able-bodied men that were willing to work could get situations in the City or country and receive fair wages. At present the demand for male labor is very slight; steam-boats being taken from their routes for the Winter, canals closing, suspension of work on buildings, farmers and brick-makers idle. In fact, the only orders on our books for labor are from contractors to dig sewers and ditches, waiters for hotels, &c. A number of those seeking employment desire light work, such as porters, clerks, watchmen, &c. Many are unfit for manual labor, being broken down by dissipation, &c. The demand for skilled male labor has been limited. About eighty per cent. of those seeking employment were only fitted to perform ordinary laborer's work. Of the aggregate number of male and female laborers required, we have furnished about seventy-five per cent.—the remainder being unwilling to leave the City or not having satisfactory references."

Mr. DONAHUE makes a like favorable report during his superintendence. The figures for the month of June, given above, exhibit a more gratifying state of affairs. Just now the demand for labor is so great that good servants are required to remain but a short time without being employed. Situations have been furnished for as many as 776 in a single week, and it not infrequently happens that the average for a number of weeks has been about 600 per week. Of about there is no charge either to employer or employee. The Bureau is an intelligence office on a large scale, where both servants and employers may have their wants satisfied in the briefest possible space of time. Applications for servants are received from all parts of the country, and this season the demand has supplied some of the principal hotels at the Springs and elsewhere with first-class servants. The pay for house-servants ranges from $12 to $20 per month, and averages $18. For males, as waiters, coachmen, farm laborers, not less than $20, and the average is about $25. Some first-class cooks have been paid as high as $40, and even $60 per month; but these cases are rare, as among the large number of applicants but few may be termed "skilled," for skilled servants have no difficulty in obtaining situations without recourse to an intelligence bureau.

Mondays and Tuesdays are the busiest days of the week. Then the employers are present in large numbers, and sometimes the throng is so great as to require the whole clerical force of the establishment to attend to them.

It is expected when this institution becomes generally known throughout the City, that the accommodations will have to be increased. The servants come from all parts of the City now, and many of the intelligence offices have been obliged to give up business in consequence of the establishment of this Bureau.

The Dry Goods Clerks at Lion Park.

The Dry Goods Clerks' Early Closing Association spent the day, yesterday, at Pion Park.

One Hundred and Tenth-street and Eighth-avenue, where the members and their wives, children and sweethearts enjoyed themselves to the fullest extent, dividing their time between dancing to the fine music of Wallace's Band, rambling around the shady grounds, riding the revolving horses, rolling ten-pins, exhibiting their skill in target-shooting, and participating in the various other enjoyments which Mr. Karr, the proprietor of this famous resort, has provided for the comfort and amusement of his guests. The Committee of Arrangements, Messrs. H. J. SWEETZEL, W. A. HAGERTON, and RUFUS SNYDER did everything in their power to make the day pleasant, and everything those who were in attendance. In the afternoon the visitors and invited guests began to arrive in large numbers, among them being "Nettie," the young lady who the best written considerable in relation to the oppression which, it is alleged, many of the female dry goods clerks are suffering, owing to the thoughtlessness of their employers. She made a brief speech setting forth the grievances of which her fellow-saleswomen complain, and obtained the sympathy of all who listened to her. After, plentiful there was a grand display of fire-works in front of the house in the Park, which concluded such enjoyment to the overseers. The festivities of the occasion were kept up until far into the evening, and when they closed all seemed to have remarkably well satisfied with the relaxation and amusement which the day afforded. The Dry Goods Clerks' Early Closing Association is now in a most flourishing condition, and has the ardent co-operation and sympathy of the most respectable dry goods establishments in the City. It numbers about 600 members. Mr. H. J. SWEETZEL is the President, having lately been re-elected for a second term.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

Organization of the Board—Address of Mayor Hall—The Announcement Issued for 1870.

At noon yesterday, the Mayor, the Recorder, and the members of the Board of Aldermen, who are under the law recently passed by the Legislature, constituted a Board of Supervisors, met in the Chamber of the Board in the new Court-house.

The Clerk, Mr. FOSTER YOUNG, read the law referred to above, and also the certificates of election of the Mayor, Recorder, and the members of the Board of Aldermen. The County Clerk then swore in the members of the Board, and Mayor Hall, taking the chair, said:

FELLOW-MEMBERS OF THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS: The law has imposed on you as your presiding officer. Personal expressions of thanks must therefore be omitted. Whether we shall hereafter thank the statute for creating these relations between us remains to be seen. The term of office of the last Board of Supervisors expired with the last day of April. Selected with that Board extended over ten years, and I assume that it always was regarded as a good and faithful record. It will receive the thanks of all for its patriotism during the rebellion, its saving gold, substituting, vetoed away islands and millions of acres of land; and the it was to tax land and the necessaries of life in order that owners of salt mines and manufacturers might enrich themselves on the money wrung from the poor. We did none of these things. We are but the successors of that Board. The rules and regulations of its officers descend to us entire. We are to serve without any compensation, and let us pledge ourselves to act prudently and faithfully in the discharge of the duties of our office.

Yesterday I received a communication from the Tax Commissioners, showing the assessed value of the real and personal estate of the City and County as follows:

Value of real estate in 1869	$[illegible],114,[illegible]
Value of real estate in 1870	747,[illegible]
Increase	$[illegible]
Value of personal estate in 1869:
Of residents	$[illegible]
Of non-residents	[illegible]
Of shareholders in banks	[illegible]
Total	$[illegible]
Value of personal estate in 1870:
Of residents	$[illegible]
Of non-residents	[illegible]
Of shareholders in banks	[illegible]
Total	$[illegible]

Showing an increase of $4,[illegible] on the value of property of residents and non-residents, and a decrease of $[illegible] on the value of shares in banks. The net increase in the assessed value of real and personal estate is therefore $[illegible]. Books in relation to the matter have been referred to the Committee on Taxes, and the Board adjourned subject to call.

The law provides for the retention of all the employes of the late Board of Supervisors by the new Board, so that no changes will be made in the clerical force of the Board.

THE PUBLIC BATHS.

The Ladies Out in Full Force Yesterday—The Experience of a Bright Bathing for Waste.

"The day we celebrate" was inaugurated at the free baths yesterday by a grand charge of females of every age, color, and condition, who advanced in a steady stream from 6 A. M. till 9 P. M., without seeming to diminish in numbers. The ticket-receivers who were stationed at the doors were kept as lively as crickets during the whole morning in giving out tickets and answering questions put to them by their fair patrons, and at the conclusion of their day's labor a fervent prayer went up, doubtless, that such another throng would in the future never darken the doors, at least in the same manner as yesterday, as it would require the patience of Job himself, and the fortitude of GRANT to withstand the avalanch of difficulties that surrounded the ticket-takers. Some Office-seeker asked a friend who came from Second-avenue, "do you really think the bath is dangerous—are there any vermin in the water? I have heard so many, many different stories about the class of people who frequent them—mere laborers' wives and drunken men—that I have really resolved to look them myself and see for myself." The Office-seeker, who was "fair to look upon," accompanied the above remarks by a look of utter disdain at the females who were crowding in, but her force being quieted by the gentlemanly usher, she ventured in, but soon returned with horror depicted on her countenance at the sights she had seen: gentlemen bathing in view, without waiting to explain her opinion of the scenes she had witnessed, she hurried out through the gangway, muttering, "Horrible, filthy, indecent," until lost to view in the surging multitude of astonished matrons and maids. The merry laughter on the inside and the pleasant remarks of the women coming out of the "tub" the same out after having partaken of a bath in the cool, pure water, belied the exclamations of the disgusted visitor. Throughout the day until their closing, fully 4,000 females patronized both baths, and their popularity has been fully established. Yesterday each bath was provided with an experienced bather, by request, the attendant KRAUN, who attended to the yours' of their respective charges. As the seasons advances, and the excellent manner in which the baths are conducted becomes known generally throughout the City, hundreds of ladies who have hitherto abstained from visiting through a fear of impropriety, will, it is expected, patronize them to the extent unknown in the annals of free baths.

The bath at the foot of Charles-street, by reason of its removal so recently from Thirteenth-street, was not crowded as much as the one at 37th-street; as it was, however, some 300 or 500 ladies visited it, a portion partially from curiosity, but most of them to bathe. Owing to the great numbers present yesterday, which completely took the officers on hand by surprise, it has been decided in the future to lengthen the time for bathing one or two hours.

OBITUARY.

Major-Gen. Joseph E. Hamblin.

Major-Gen. JOSEPH E. HAMBLIN, a brief announcement of whose death appeared in these columns yesterday, was one of the most gallant soldiers that fought for the Union in the late war, and a gentleman whose character was without a blemish. He was born, we believe, in Massachusetts, in 1826. In April, 1861, he was appointed Adjutant of the famous Fifth New-York Volunteers, better known as the Duryea Zouaves, and served with that regiment during part of the first year of the war, during which he was commissioned Major of the Sixty-fifth New-York Volunteers, (First United States Chasseurs,) of which, at that time, Gen. JOHN COCHRANE was in command, and Gen. ALEXANDER SHALER was Lieutenant-Colonel. With this regiment he served with distinction, as Major, Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel, until, toward the close of the war, he attained the rank of Brigadier-General, and subsequently was brevetted Major-General for distinguished gallantry. Gen. HAMBLIN's command was attached to the Sixth Corps, and in all the fierce battles in which that body was engaged, when attached to the Army of the Potomac, and while in the Shenandoah Valley with SHERIDAN, he was present. He was severely wounded at Winchester. He was in the final struggles around Richmond, and only sheathed his sword when his country had no further need of his services. Since the war he has resided in this City, and at the time of his death, which occurred in the forty-third year of his age, held the responsible position of Superintendent of Agencies for the Commonwealth Fire Insurance Company. Gen. HAMBLIN's generous and genial qualities endeared him to a host of friends. Before the war he was for some time a member of the Seventh Regiment, whose commandant honors his memory as follows:

HEAD-QUARTERS SEVENTH REGIMENT,
NATIONAL GUARD S. N. Y.,
NEW-YORK, June 29, 1870.

The Commandant with regret announces to the Regiment the death of Brevet Major-Gen. JOSEPH E. HAMBLIN. HAMBLIN was for many years a prominent member of this regiment, and served with great distinction in the army during the recent rebellion.

As a token of respect to his memory, the members of this regiment are requested to wear mourning, and will assemble in full uniform, (gray pants,) at the Armory, on Tuesday, 5th inst., at 4 o'clock P. M. By order of Col. EMMONS CLARK.

LOUIS FITZGERALD, Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel and Adjutant.

Gen. HAMBLIN's funeral takes place today. Gen. SHALER has issued the following general order in relation to it:

HEAD-QUARTERS FIRST DIVISION N. G. S. N. Y.,
NEW-YORK, July 4, 1870.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 1.—I. It is with the deepest regret that the General Commanding announces to the Division that Brevet Major-Gen. JOS. E. HAMBLIN, the Adjutant-General and Chief of Staff of the First Division, who served with such well-known gallantry in the late war, died at his residence yesterday, the 3d inst.

II. The following detail is ordered as an escort to his remains: The Ninth Regiment Infantry (the troop of Washington Grays Cavalry, and the eight-gun battery Gatling Guns, commanding; two sections of Battery A, Artillery.

III. The escort will be commanded by Brig.-Gen. COUTLEY, and will report to him in Madison-avenue, between 27th-street and Twenty-sixth-street, at 11 o'clock P. M. on the 7th inst.

IV. The General commanding feels that this information will be received with the profoundest sorrow by the officers and men of the Division, and he assures that all who have known the late Gen. HAMBLIN, either in his military or social character, will readily accord the last respects due one who has been so well known and so well loved. Gen. SHALER of the Division who desire to take part in the ceremonies are hereby authorized to take part in the ceremonies, as the Division is now in a most flourishing condition, and has the ardent co-operation and sympathy of the most respectable dry goods establishments in the City. It numbers about 600 members. Mr. H. J. SWEETZEL is the President, having lately been re-elected for a second term.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

Organization of the Board—Address of Mayor Hall—The Announcement Issued for 1870.

At noon yesterday, the Mayor, the Recorder, and the members of the Board of Aldermen, who are under the law recently passed by the Legislature, constituted a Board of Supervisors, met in the Chamber of the Board in the new Court-house.

Showing an increase of $4,[illegible] on the value of property of residents and non-residents, and a decrease of $[illegible] on the value of shares in banks. The net increase in the assessed value of real and personal estate is therefore $[illegible]. Books in relation to the matter have been referred to the Committee on Taxes, and the Board adjourned subject to call.

M., without seeming to diminish in numbers. The ticket-receivers who were stationed at the doors were kept as lively as crickets during the whole morning in giving out tickets and answering questions put to them by their fair patrons, and at the conclusion of their day's labor a fervent prayer went up, doubtless, that such another throng would in the future never darken the doors, at least in the same manner as yesterday, as it would require the patience of Job himself, and the fortitude of GRANT to withstand the avalanch of difficulties that surrounded the ticket-takers. Some Office-seeker asked a friend who came from Second-avenue, "do you really think the bath is dangerous—are there any vermin in the water? I have heard so many, many different stories about the class of people who frequent them—mere laborers' wives and drunken men—that I have really resolved to look them myself and see for myself." The Office-seeker, who was "fair to look upon," accompanied the above remarks by a look of utter disdain at the females who were crowding in, but her force being quieted by the gentlemanly usher, she ventured in, but soon returned with horror depicted on her countenance at the sights she had seen: gentlemen bathing in view, without waiting to explain her opinion of the scenes she had witnessed, she hurried out through the gangway, muttering, "Horrible, filthy, indecent," until lost to view in the surging multitude of astonished matrons and maids. The merry laughter on the inside and the pleasant remarks of the women coming out of the "tub" the same out after having partaken of a bath in the cool, pure water, belied the exclamations of the disgusted visitor. Throughout the day until their closing, fully 4,000 females patronized both baths, and their popularity has been fully established. Yesterday each bath was provided with an experienced bather, by request, the attendant KRAUN, who attended to the yours' of their respective charges. As the seasons advances, and the excellent manner in which the baths are conducted becomes known generally throughout the City, hundreds of ladies who have hitherto abstained from visiting through a fear of impropriety, will, it is expected, patronize them to the extent unknown in the annals of free baths.

The bath at the foot of Charles-street, by reason of its removal so recently from Thirteenth-street, was not crowded as much as the one at 37th-street; as it was, however, some 300 or 500 ladies visited it, a portion partially from curiosity, but most of them to bathe. Owing to the great numbers present yesterday, which completely took the officers on hand by surprise, it has been decided in the future to lengthen the time for bathing one or two hours.

OBITUARY.

Major-Gen. Joseph E. Hamblin.

Major-Gen. JOSEPH E. HAMBLIN, a brief announcement of whose death appeared in these columns yesterday, was one of the most gallant soldiers that fought for the Union in the late war, and a gentleman whose character was without a blemish. He was born, we believe, in Massachusetts, in 1826. In April, 1861, he was appointed Adjutant of the famous Fifth New-York Volunteers, better known as the Duryea Zouaves, and served with that regiment during part of the first year of the war, during which he was commissioned Major of the Sixty-fifth New-York Volunteers, (First United States Chasseurs,) of which, at that time, Gen.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

The yachts Dauntless and Cambria got off fairly, yesterday, at 2½ P. M., from Daunt's Rock, with fine weather and a strong west-by-north breeze blowing. For the first twenty miles, the Dauntless led, but the Cambria tacked with the wind and seemed to get ahead. The wind had changed and blew strong from the south-west. The opinion entertained on the other side is that with a quiet sea and favoring wind, the Dauntless will win; but that rough weather would be sure to give the race to the Cambria. Betting was active on the result.... In the House of Lords, last night, Earl GRANVILLE said the expedition to the Red River was not for conquest, but to transfer the territory from the Hudson Bay Company to the Crown. ....The appointments of Earl GRANVILLE to the Department of Foreign Affairs, and of the Earl of KIMBERLEY to the Colonial Office, call forth the approbation of the London Times. The vacancy in the Admiralty by the resignation of Mr. TREVELYAN, is not to be filled at present....The successors of MACLISE and CRESWICK in the Royal Academy are Messrs. WELLS and ANSDELL....The death of Mr. STEPHEN BLAIRS, formerly member of Parliament, and a prominent Freemason, is announced.... Liverpool shipping was decorated yesterday, the anniversary of the sailing of the first Cunarder, thirty years ago....A disturbance in front of the Carlist Club-rooms in Madrid, on Saturday night, resulted in the killing of one and the wounding of several persons....The subject of the succession to the throne occupied the Council of Spanish Ministers on Saturday. The Paris Constitutionnel says agents of Gen. PRIM have offered the Crown to a Prussian Prince, and remarks that it is a mere intrigue if the consent of the Cortes is not given to it. A London dispatch says these negotiations have been abandoned....A shocking tragedy is reported from Seville, in which a jealous husband murders his wife and child and a policeman whom he suspected of intimacy with his wife. ....Censorship over foreign papers in France has terminated, according to the Pall Mall Gazette. ....The Ecumenical Council, on Sunday, adopted the form of a preface and chapters 1 and 2 of the scheme of infallibility.

CONGRESS.

Soon after the assembling of the Senate, yesterday, a motion to adjourn resulted in a tie vote of 20 yeas and 20 nays. The Funding bill was referred to the Finance Committee and ordered to be printed. A bill was reported to transfer the Cherokees from North Carolina to the Cherokee lands west of the Mississippi. It provides for paying each Indian $50 with interest, as stipulated in the treaty of 1835. The Fortification bill was reported without amendment. The Atlantic and Pacific Railroad bill was amended so as to make the action conditional on the completion of the road by 1878. The Naturalization bill was taken up, and the amendment to strike the word "white" from all Naturalization laws having been adopted, the question recurred on the amendment excluding the Chinese from the benefits of the present legislation. A protracted debate ensued.

GENERAL.

The President and his party left Hartford yesterday, and proceeded to Woodstock, making short stops at various places along the route, to receive addresses and acknowledge the cheers and enthusiasm of the throngs assembled to greet him. At Woodstock, the "Fourth" was celebrated by the reading of the Declaration of Independence, and speeches by Hon. S. L. WOODFORD, Rev. H. W. BEECHER, Gen. BUTLER, and Gov. HAWLEY. The Russian Minister returned thanks for the compliment paid in the performance of the National Hymn of Russia by the band, and the ceremonies concluded with the planting of a tree by the President, assisted by Mr. BEECHER, Senator BUCKINGHAM, the Russian Minister and several ladies. The President left for Norwich, and thence took the boat for New-York.

The Mississippi steam-boat race terminated yesterday forenoon at St. Louis in the victory of the Robert E. Lee over the Natchez by three hours and forty-four minutes. The time from New-Orleans was three days, eighteen hours, and fourteen minutes, beating the famous time of the James M. White four hours and fifty-five minutes. A million dollars are said to have been staked on the result.

The Conservative caucus in Richmond, Va., last night, by nearly a two-thirds vote, determined that it was inexpedient to reapportion the State for Congressional representation at this session of the Legislature. No action was agreed upon with reference to the formation of parties in the State.

The Customs' receipts for the year ending June 30, last, at Montreal, have been considerably more than the previous year. The vessels arrived at Montreal for the past year were 187 more than the preceding year.

The new Board of Supervisors, comprising the Mayor, Recorder, and the members of the Board of Aldermen, met at noon yesterday. The Mayor, being ex officio Chairman of the Board, presided. The assessment lists for 1870 were presented, showing an increase in the taxable value of real and personal estate of $60,120,825.

The game of base-ball between the Harvard and Yale nines at New-Haven, yesterday, resulted in a victory for the Harvards by a score of 24 to 22.

The Fourth of July was largely honored in this City and vicinity. The First Division N. G. S. N. Y. had an early morning parade, and was reviewed by Major-Gen. McDOWELL. The command presented a fine appearance. There was the usual amount of private pyrotechnics during the day, and in the evening the promised fire-works, on a grand scale, in the various parks. At the public institutions the anniversary was duly observed. A great many people availed themselves of the opportunity to absent themselves from the City. The steam-boat excursions were a decided success.

Today the first charter election in Long Island City takes place. The polls are opened at 6 A. M. in each of the five wards, and close at 6 P. M. The officers to be elected are a Mayor, Recorder, Treasurer, Collector, Justice of the Peace, and two constables from the city at large, and one Alderman, each for short and long terms, and two Inspectors of Election from each ward.

A young gentleman named JOHN MYERS, while on his way home from church, on Sunday evening, was shot in the shoulder by a son of ANTONIA FOSSATI, at Richmond-avenue, West Brighton. The friends of Mr. JOSSATI claim that it was accidental, while some of the Police say that THOMAS fired into a large crowd deliberately. Dr. REMOUX attended to the wounded man.

AUGUSTUS HANLEY, a hand on the steamship Manhattan, fell overboard, yesterday, at the foot of Wallstreet, and was drowned, the body being soon after recovered. As some of the relatives declared that the deceased had been pushed overboard by the Captain during a quarrel, Coroner FLYNN decided not to make an investigation until the steamer returns from Barbadoes, to which port she was on the point of sailing when the accident occurred. HANLEY was thirty-five years of age, and resided at No. 26 Cherry-street.

HENRY BUHLER, of No. 113 Eighth-avenue, NICHOLAS FROST, of No. 546 Broome-street, ALEX. KAHN, No. 342 West Tenth-street, JACOB LOHMAN, No. 115 Wooster, and JOHN MCHUGHES, of No. 363 Seventh-avenue, who sell liquors at these addresses, were charged with having violated the Sunday Excise law July 2. Justice COX, at Jefferson Market, yesterday, held each to $200 bail for his appearance at the Court of General Sessions.

At the Essex Market Police Court, yesterday, Adolph Beach, No. 99 Division-street; John Conly, No. 105 Monroe-street; John C. Fradenstein, No. 328 East Houston-street; John Bulwinkle, No. 77 Market-street; John Connolly, No. 229 South-street; and August Salier, No. 112 Bowery, liquor-dealers, were charged with violating the Sunday Excise law. Justice SCOTT made each of them find $200 bail to answer at the Court of General Sessions.

The Senate and the Taxes.

The squabble in the Senate about the Tax bill might be very easily ended. There would have been none but for the prevailing Senatorial tendency to keep all controversies perpetually open, and there would be no difficulty in discovering a method of escape if Senators were not Senators more prone to favor special interests than to consult the wishes or interests of the people.

There seemed, the other day, a fair chance of striking off a round eighty millions of taxes, including the income tax and sundry other taxes which the House bill would have continued. The material point of difference between the two chambers related to the income tax, which the House proposed to continue in a modified form, and which the Senate proposed altogether to drop. The issue was a square one, and one that would have enabled the Senate to test the disposition of Representatives to enlarge or curtail the amount of taxes to be reduced. But Mr. SHERMAN, in a half-hearted way, deprecated the large reform contemplated by the Senate, and insisted that if the income tax were dispensed with, other internal taxes on certain customs' duties must be retained. This declaration gave special interests a pretext for intrigue, and Senators were found to help them. By a maneuver which cannot be too strongly condemned, a minority contrived to reopen the decision of the majority, and, by reviving the income tax, to nullify all that had been done. The result is, that powerful combinations are endeavoring to fasten burdens on other shoulders than their own, and that the aggregate of relief afforded to the people seems likely to be much less than the original action of the Senate led them to expect.

We favored a lower income tax, with reforms in its administration, as long as there was a possibility of effecting an enlargement of relief in other directions. When that possibility was destroyed by the decisions come to in reference to the tariff, we accepted the refusal of the Senate to renew the tax on incomes as an available substitute for other modes of cutting down the taxes. It lessened the people's load by so much more than the House bill, and to that extent made the course of the Senate more satisfactory. And we apprehend that from this position there would have been no departure had not Mr. SHERMAN persistently echoed the Treasury's protest against reducing taxes too much.

The purpose of this protest cannot be misunderstood. It is intended to sustain the policy which has maintained, and would still maintain, oppressive taxation as a means of redeeming bonded obligations long in advance of their maturity. Mr. SHERMAN's funding scheme was constructed with the same end in view. It proceeds on the assumption that an enormous revenue—a revenue far exceeding the real requirements of the Government—will continue to be collected, and that thus the process of paying a debt that is not due may take the precedence of a process that would relieve the country of exactions which exhaust its energies and cripple its prosperity. Hence these declarations against the promised reduction of taxes. Hence these repeated attempts to deprive the people of benefits they require and to maintain burdens from which they suffer.

The Senate has before it a simple and very satisfactory solution of its difficulty. There is no valid reason why it should make the abandonment of the income tax an excuse for restoring other taxes, repealed by the measure now under consideration; nor why it should reimpose the income tax if the other provisions of the bill are to stand. The country looks for, and is entitled to expect, the largest possible relief. This relief it must have, or the Republican Party will be held responsible for injustice and neglect. Instead of hesitating, and contending, and balancing competing claims to legislative favor, let the Senate make thorough work of its reform, and pass a bill whose beneficent scope shall be represented by at least eighty millions of diminished taxation.

The reports of the earlier sessions of the Ecumenical Council represented our American prelates in a somewhat doubtful character. It seemed as if the believers in republican equality in civil affairs, were about to be among the most forward in setting up an autocratic despotism in the Church, and that men who lived in a country where titles and orders are not recognized as indicative of rank, were about to emulate each other in submission to the Holy See, in order to obtain certain honorary marks of ecclesiastical status, and certain ornamental articles of ecclesiastical costume. Whether such statements were well founded or not, there is good reason to believe that, in some instances at least, our fellow-countrymen have adopted a policy more worthy of the Republic to which they belong. The Roman correspondent of the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung has proved himself to be almost the only reliable authority on matters of news pertaining to the Council. In one of his latest communications, this writer gives the purport of a reply made by Archbishop PURCELL, of Cincinnati, to an attack upon the position of the Gallican Bishops. He is said to have characterized the entire production as bearing a strong resemblance to "an accumulation of sophistries," and to have defended the opposition to the infallibility dogma as being based upon the doctrines sanctioned by the Council of Trent, and by the Sixth, Seventh and Eighth Councils. Frequent papal errors in matters of faith were cited, and republican theories of ecclesiastical polity were freely avowed by the Archbishop. Just as kings exist for countries and not countries for kings, it was claimed, the Pope exists for the Church and not the Church for the Pope. It was likewise alleged that the Church is loved by her American children, because it is the freest society in the world; and the obvious inference was left to be drawn, that the adoption of a dogma whose tendency is despotic would seriously impair such attachment.

On behalf of the British-American section of the Church, an equally emphatic declaration was made by Archbishop CONNOLLY, of Halifax. His opposition is the more remarkable, since he went to Rome as an adherent of the new dogma, and had in his diocese prohibited the teaching of Gallican doctrines. This Prelate urged a somewhat striking appeal to the letter of Scripture as being the only final rule on such a question, and made a very decided point by citing how, in the Apostolic Council at Jerusalem, St. James accepted the doctrine of St. Peter, not on account of the authority of the latter, but because he found that it was in harmony with the teaching of the Prophets. A telling rebuke was also administered to the over-forward zeal of Archbishop MANNING, and the Council was solemnly warned against the danger of creating a fatal and lasting schism, by insisting on the promulgation of the new dogma.

It is obvious, however, that should the Holy See determine to take the perilous step, an undoubted majority will be found supporting it. The Bishops in the Italian peninsula outnumber the Bishops over all the rest of Europe; and even were the latter united in opposition—which is far from being the case—the Italians, without the reinforcement of some two hundred ecclesiastics of various grades, who take the Papal side also, would easily outvote the combined forces of European and American opposition. So that, after all, the infallibility dogma, with its momentous issues for religion and civilization, resolves itself merely into a question of Papal diplomacy.

What They Say to the College Boys.

It has been our annual duty to sketch, if not to entirely republish, the addresses made at college Commencements about these days. In most instances they are the carefully-elaborated productions of thoughtful and practiced minds, the speaker being generally selected for some conspicuous intellectual excellence, either in forum or pulpit. Yet a more inane mass of threadbare argument it is hard to find. Without absolute paucity of idea, there is a flavor of antiquity—an ancient and a fish-like smell—about the idea itself that is not refreshing. He who addresses the graduating class of a college, becomes himself at once a scholiast, and walks among his rounded periods on stilts of loftiest rhetoric. No matter how attractive he may be in practical life, how fresh and vigorous in real and active polemics, he becomes virtuously dull so soon as he says "Young gentlemen," and begins to discourse about Alma Mater and the voyage of life.

Still, as there are sermons in stones, so there are good lessons, or at least suggestions, in the class of orations under notice. Sometimes there are coincidences of thought which are themselves texts upon which long discourses may be preached. For instance, two of the clearest addresses were delivered at the two great schools of New-Jersey, one at Rutger's, by Judge BRADLEY, of the United States Supreme Court; the other at Princeton, by Mr. ROBESON, Secretary of the Navy, both Jerseymen, and true lovers of the noble schools of which they are alumni. But both evolved the same thought from the depths of their inner consciousness, and curiously enough it is one peculiarly appropriate to the State. Judge BRADLEY pointed out that the tenure of any one human life is so brief that it cannot perpetuate a good work, and that corporations—meaning colleges and not railroads, we suppose—living on through hundreds of years of accumulation and accretion, confer an element of immortality on the wisdom of unnumbered years combined with the freshness of eternal youth—or words to that effect. The next day or two, at Princeton, Secretary ROBESON elaborated the same theory of the immortality of corporate life in terms of equal eloquence, and led us to understand how each drop added to the bucket or learning by the individual is preserved for the refreshment of future generations, so that they may drink and never be filled.

In adverting thus to the fondness of the Jersey intellect for corporate immortality, we might further illustrate it by the familiar example of Camden and Amboy, and the fidelity with which the State has done all and more than it agreed to do for that giant corporation. But we prefer another instance, as it is found in New-Jersey reverence for law, and the steady courage with which law is there enforced. Not so much the colleges of New-Jersey do we admire—and who does not honor them?—as the fruit of their manly teachings, as it ripens into the full harvest of an able and scholarly Bar and a fearless Judiciary. If, as we have a right to assume, much of this crown of honor to the State is due to the methods of the education of its young men, it is because the colleges teach respect for law, justice, established custom, forms that have the indorsement of the common sense of ages, and do not wander off into the bogs of sentimentalism by teaching exclusively the "law of love"—as if a man had any right to love that which is mean and hateful.

In strong, but not inharmonious contrast with Jersey reverence for the past and corporate immortality, comes the voice of Cornell University, that young giant who has the growth of the mushroom and the solidity of the oak. It has no past to reverence, but faces the future with determined pluck. Mr. GOLDWIN SMITH was the orator the other day before the literary societies. So far was he from the old-fashioned routine, that in discussing the forms of religion and their relation to politics, he spoke of the Protestant churches as having stopped half-way in the Reformation, asserting Reason as against the Church of Rome, but asserting authority over their own members; but Reason had now set up her banner in defiance of all authority, having science and all the forces of modern civilization at her side, and he predicted the final victory of rationalism. We know something of a church without a Bishop. Mr. SMITH's suggestion of a church without a creed is somewhat novel.

But so the struggle goes on, the individual ever striving to achieve a divorce from that which binds him to society, and assert a higher personal liberty of thought and action,—to be a law unto himself—society holding him ever in bonds, and only slackening here and there a ligature which cuts too deep into the flesh. And society is itself, Mr. GOLDWIN SMITH to the contrary notwithstanding, a corporate immortality, after the manner of the New-Jersey teachings to which we have alluded, perhaps lightly, but which we respect in earnest.

The New Constitution of Illinois.

The new Constitution of Illinois, of the adoption of which there appears to be no doubt, effects many reforms in the Government of that State, besides introducing new features, the working of which will be watched with interest. The Constitution now presumed to be superseded was notable rather for its omissions than for the useful provisions which it contained. The bill of rights, for example, was silent upon the security of political rights, without regard to the religious opinions of citizens, nor was there any clause to prevent the granting of special privileges which should be irrevocable. No safeguard was provided against the election to the Assembly, or appointment to State offices of trust or profit, of persons convicted of bribery, perjury or other infamous crime. The apportionment of the State into districts was entirely arbitrary, and could be used by any political party for the furtherance of its own aims, without reference to the general interests of the State. There was no clear or definite law upon the subject of legislative appropriations. Naturally the practice was loose and improper, and frequently resulted in the expenditures of money in other ways than those intended by the votes ordering the appropriation. In addition to this evil there was the still greater one of reckless and extravagant special legislation, against which there was no provision, and by means of which, as Gov. PALMER recently said, the lobbyists "demand the most valuable grants of franchises and public property, and by the combination of many interests carry everything before them." The Legislature was in the habit of releasing collectors from their bonds, and towns and counties from their share of taxation, and there was no law to forbid this. There was no provision against the assumption of the debts of the counties and towns by the State, nor any on the undue retention in office of persons elected thereto for a definite term. A simple majority, instead of a two-thirds vote, was sufficient to override the Governor's veto. There was no provision on the subject of education or railroads. County authorities followed their own course in respect to taxation. And on other subjects the old Constitution was similarly imperfect.

The omissions thus indicated are supplied in the Constitution just voted for, and new provisions are introduced of great importance. Thus, while a thorough and efficient system of free schools is provided for, and whereby all the children of the State may receive a good common education, no money is to be taken from the Treasury by appropriations for the support of sectarian schools, or for any other sectarian purpose. The railroads of the State also come, for the first time, under public supervision. They are to keep offices for the transfer of stock, their books are to be open to the public, and reports are to be made to the State Auditor. Besides this, a majority of the directors incorporated in the State must reside therein, the General Assembly will fix the maximum charges for the various roads, and there are other rules concerning corporate, financial and traffic arrangements by which many extortions and inconveniences, and practical frauds, will be no longer possible. Perhaps the most novel feature of the new instrument is the introduction of the principle of minority representation.

The saving which it is hoped will be effected in the interest of the people is very considerable. The one item of printing and other expenses attending special legislation is alone estimated at a million of dollars annually. This will be saved, as also will be two millions from railroad and warehouse extortions, and, in fact, the total amount the payment of which will be spared the people is said to be at least six millions a year. Of course, very powerful interests have been arrayed against these reforms, but the popular feeling was too strong to be overcome. Whether the minority clause of the Constitution is adopted cannot be certainly known as yet. There seems to have been a strong feeling against it in some quarters, as useless and complicated, and, perhaps, even hurtful. That portion of the ticket submitted to the people is of slight consequence, however, compared with the conversion of the State Government into a really effective, comprehensive and just system.

Where Shall We Go?

The question of where to go to spend the Summer recess, falls glibly from the lips of thousands, but the answer, in most cases, has a much more hesitating sound. A burnt child dreads the fire, and the hotel of last year, with its monstrous prices, its dirty servants, its dishes all tasting just alike, its myriads of flies, and its never-ceasing uproar, call up a picture of bliss only to the ignorant. It may be folly in such an instance to be wise, and change may be, if possible, for the worse; yet on the whole, as regards country hotels, we are apt to reverse Hamlet's dolorous apothegm and to waive the ills we have made disgusted acquaintance with in favor of others that we know not of. Go somewhere, we must. For during the protracted broil of the last fortnight in June, have we not all been babbling to each other of green fields, or whispering consolation about the yellow sands and the azure sea? Anticipation may indeed be more than half the pleasure in these matters; but most people would be ashamed, after so much talk, not to reduce it to reality.

It is often said, sometimes in sport by those who cannot get away, and sometimes out of serious conviction, that New-York is the most charming of cities in which to spend the hot weather, and that it is absurd to exchange the quiet comfort of one's own home for the noise, bad food, cramped rooms and poor service of watering-place hotels. Were the question merely one of comparative comfort, we have little doubt that—at least for those fortunate enough to have houses of their own—this view of the case is a sensible one to accept and be governed by. But, after all, there is philosophy in change. What most people need to restore their flagging energies is, first, a different air to that which they commonly breath, and next, different scenery—and sometimes different people—about them. As regards the atmosphere, all except the very robust, to whom such a consideration is of little moment, should seek what is as unlike as possible that to which they are accustomed. Those who live by the sea-shore should turn for healthful change to the air of interior mountains; those who dwell inland should repair to the sea. It seems probable that our people are too much guided in such selection by certain accidental conventions. For example, most European capitals, as London, Paris, Vienna, Berlin and Madrid lie at some distance from tide-water. The literature that reaches us from these places constantly refers in the season to the delights of the ocean. Their inhabitants hasten in Summer to luxuriate in the breezes that fly over Neptune's "innumerable smiles" as the most wholesome and natural alternation from the air of the interior. Their novels and journals teem with appetizing allusions to such pleasures. Punch sings the joys of Hastings and Margate, and the Charivari those of Biarritz and Nice. Whether consciously or not, our people are more or less affected by fashion. Most of the largest and most important of American cities lie on the seacoast, and a large proportion of their inhabitants habitually seek their relaxation, not among the inland mountains, but on the neighboring beaches and rocks, that are washed by the salty waves. Now, old ocean is a lovely thing to look upon, and is fringed by charms not to be found even among the bluest and most picturesque of mountains, the deepest and most solemn of woods, and the sweetest and most sylvan of valleys; but for dwellers by the sea the air of these latter, and not the rough breath of Neptune, is, in the Summer vacation, most needful and salutary.

Before settling, therefore, this momentous question, Where shall we go? it will be the part of wisdom to consider the peculiar bodily condition of the family or individual—a process in which the aid of a good physician may be useful—and to determine the matter with proper reference thereto. Many an incipient bronchitis or other trouble of the respiratory organs may be checked in a high and rare atmosphere that in the damp and heavy air of the sea might be confirmed or aggravated. Conversely, there are of course disorders for the alleviation of which the substitution of sea-side for mountain air will prove most advantageous. Apart from these primary considerations, there can be no doubt that where people go is often of less moment than what they do when they get there. Those who go out of town to eat or drink injudiciously, to turn night into day, or otherwise to distract their systems by unwholesome pleasures, may have made a good choice so far as atmosphere is concerned, and yet be worse off in the end than if they had failed to do so. "Life" says MARTIAL, "is not to live but to be well," and there is no better maxim to keep in mind, either for those who seek the elastic oxygen of the hill-top or those who go down to the briny embraces of that "mother and lover of men, the sea."

Spain may be as chivalrous and plucky as the Spanish journals of Havana declare it to be; but it cannot with impunity disregard the protests of the civilized world against the horrible cruelties which have disgraced the conduct of hostilities in Cuba. We have no doubt that the Cuban insurgents have disgraced themselves and humanity by barbarities and outrages as frequent as those for which Spaniards are accountable; but that does not alter the case as between Spain and the public opinion of the United States or of Europe. There is another fact, too, of which the Havana journalists may rest assured. This country will not be a passive spectator of injustice and cruelty even in Cuba, when American citizens are the victims. We have no inclination, at present, to meddle in Cuban affairs; but this country will tolerate no further the needless and unjust excesses of Spanish authority at the expense of Americans.

It is to be hoped that the Naturalization question, like the currency and the Congressional reapportionment questions, will not be sacrificed to Senatorial obstinacy. The Senate sins as too much in respect of naturalization reform. The House bill may be, theoretically, very imperfect, but probably it expresses nearly all that we are likely just now to obtain. If we cannot affirm by legislation all that is desirable as between Federal authority and the States, at least we may secure more efficient means for preventing naturalization frauds, and for punishing properly those who participate in them.

The Tennessee House of Representatives seems unwilling to aid the Senate of that State in inaugurating repudiation as affecting bonds issued by the State to certain of its railroads. There may be questions involving the regularity of some of these issues, and the manner in which they were acquired by the railroad officials; but having passed into the hands of innocent holders—having been put upon the market, and bought and sold in good faith—the bonds have a character which the Legislature of Tennessee should steadfastly uphold. That State cannot afford to tamper with its public credit.

If the Chicago banks alone suffered from the large risks and the inevitable losses which are attendant upon grain and whisky speculations, there would be little sympathy for the stockholders. The extension of undue facilities to speculators is, however, not confined to Chicago. It is the bane of our banking everywhere. Wholesome industry and legitimate trade are denied the accommodation which speculators obtain without much trouble. The whole community suffers in consequence. True, while incurring great risks, the bank managers secure a chance of great profits; but good banking nevertheless implies discouragement of gambling, like that which curses the grain and whisky markets of Chicago.

Surely there are few so ill-informed in regard to life insurance as to credit the statement of "The Old Hartford Insurer," published in our last, "that not over fifteen per cent of the receipts of the life insurance companies are paid out for losses." There is a margin, of course, between the premiums actually required to enable a company to fulfill its obligations and the premiums received. It is out of this margin that expenses are defrayed, that a reserve is provided to meet unforeseen contingencies, and that dividends are declared. If the management is economical and judicious, and the method of distributing available surplus just, the insured receives back a large proportion of whatever excess of premium he may have paid. The misfortune is that the carefully managed companies are comparatively rare, and that, partly to cover the requirements of extravagant management, partly to meet an ignorant demand for what are falsely called "profits," the premiums exacted are much higher than they need be. We are convinced that in this matter the majority of life insurance companies adhere to an unwise policy, and one that has shaken the faith of multitudes in the system they advertise.

There is probably at this moment no contest more widely diffused than that between the advocates of secular education and those who favor the introduction of certain religious standards into the public schools. The discussion of the question "drags its slow length along" in the English Parliament, without any reasonable prospect of an early settlement. M. GUIZOT has made, on behalf of the Protestants of France, a rather inconclusive attempt to find the higher culture from ecclesiastical control, and the general question is one that divides with Centralism and Federalism public attention in America. In Belgium the Liberals only bide their time to open the crusade; in Italy there are clans of its early agitation; and only the political dismemberment of Spain prevents an advance being made on this subject parallel to the liberal line laid down by the Constitution.

Facilities for the diffusion of newspapers are being increased all over Europe. The French journals are about to be relieved from the one-cent stamp. A similar measure is likely to be soon passed in Germany; and the English Government will shortly declare a uniform rate of one cent newspaper postage. In no country in the world is a newspaper considered so much of a personal necessity as in our own, but such steps toward an increased dissemination of the daily press cannot fail to bring about a closer approximation than hitherto existing to the ubiquity of the influence of American journalism. The cause of liberty all over the world must likewise derive a sensible impulse from the increase of a power which has been the most powerful agent in popular enfranchisement.

The statement published yesterday of the pecuniary receipts of the religious and charitable societies of New-York, representing as it does an amount equal to the income of some European kingdoms, and falling, as it necessarily must, to take account of a large proportion of private and congregational beneficence, presents a convincing proof of the munificent liberality of our citizens. There is, however, one feature of Christian effort, donations to which are conspicuous by their absence. We refer to the important national work of Indian evangelization. We are aware that this enterprise is not absolutely without supporters in our City, but it is none the less true that the importance attached to it is very small compared with that conceded to many other schemes which may safely be said to possess claims much less powerful. It is not creditable to Protestant bodies that the greatest triumphs of Christianity among the Indian tribes of this continent should still be put down to the account of the labors of Jesuit missionaries.

Further details of the wholesale system of baby-farming by certain parties now awaiting trial in the English metropolis, seem to resolve it into a wholesale system of infanticide. At the preliminary examination of the accused persons, a number of sickening details were adduced from the testimony of a maid-servant and others, which, if substantiated, will show that a ghastly trade of very considerable magnitude is being carried on in the heart of a civilized and Christian community. The respectable portion of the English Press has frequently directed attention to the significance of certain advertisements made public by the less scrupulous journals, which, if they had any meaning at all, had a very sinister one. The facts lately elicited touching an indiscriminate administration of laudanum to the inmates of "baby-farms," and hinting at the deliberate putting away of infants, and the frequent discovery of their dead bodies in the vicinity of such places, show that such suspicions were but too well founded. Public attention is now fairly aroused in the matter, and it seems probable that some of the offenders will certainly be brought to justice.

ITALY.

Home Absorbing Attention—Italian Political Majority Attained—The Chinese Commissioners—Growth of the American Nation—Victor Emmanuel Accoiled by a Lady, with Sciltian.

From Our Own Correspondent.

FLORENCE, Friday, June 10, 1870.

The discussion of the financial project is still going on in the Italian Parliament without yet much progress made, but with the hope every day brightening that practical results will be arrived at. Home attracts more attention just now than political affairs in the Kingdom of Italy, and the closing up, by an arbitrary order of the majority, of the general discussion of the infallibility project, shows that the time for the final decision cannot be far off. Many of the Bishops are making calculations for a return to their dioceses for a little rest during the fiery season, which, in a week or two from this, will begin at Rome.

MAJORITY OF THE NATION.

This week we have had throughout the Kingdom of Italy the celebration of the Statuto. On Sunday last Italy entered upon the twenty-second year of her constitutional life. The nation has attained its majority in freedom, and the years of understanding, under a liberal régime, are well begun. The gristle of infancy has hardened into stiff bone, and the period of whining adolescence is passed. Spanish, German and French nurses, to whose breasts the Italians so long clung, to be nourished with the milk of despotism, have left the house, and the heir, under partial guardianship, is in the enjoyment of his patrimony. It must be said that the fêsta of the Constitution, the most important political holiday of the whole year, is not kept with so much display of enthusiasm as might be expected. Here, in the new capital, the signs of joy and gratitude manifested are certainly much inferior to those witnessed in former years at Turin, and still displayed in that active city. Here in Florence the beginning and the ending of all that was done was a salute to the day from the guns of the fortress at sunrise, and in the evening an illumination of the city and the park of the Cascine.

THE CHINESE EMBASSY.

We have here this week the Chinese Commissioners, and they have been presented, with the usual ceremonies, at Court. They excite little interest, except among the idle and curious Florentines, whose search for novelties is never weary and never satisfied. Since the death of the chief of the mission at St. Petersburg, there has been no recognized head; but by good fortune most of the work was done before that great loss. Here there will be little difficulty in obtaining confirmation of the policy already established by the sanction of the leading commercial Powers. After a few more visits the Commissioners will be at liberty to take the nearest way back to their own country.

THE AMERICAN CENSUS.

The facts to be developed by the coming census of the United States are waited for with interest by those in Europe, who make a special study of the science of statistics in connection with the development of the power of States. The aggregate of population which the census will give, is well understood, as it can be easily calculated; for the increase of numbers since the first enumeration of 1790, has been as regular as the movement of the hand round the clock. But there are infinite details which the census gives upon which the calculations of the professors of political economy are based. These will come to hand only with the full reports. Meanwhile, enough will be known to enable the thoughtful observer to measure the rapidity of the progress of the United States to the position of the dominatine Power of the world. And it is in this light regarded, which gives to the subject extraordinary interest to European statesmen. Leaving the Russian Empire out of the catalogue of really civilized States, the United States has (and the Confederation should now always be spoken of in the singular number) already a population exceeding that of any of the great modern nations upon which the light of Christian civility has fallen. This striking result is reached before the first century is rounded out since the handful of colonists declared their right to the enjoyment of an independent citizenship. The historian tells us that, as near as can be found out, the Roman Empire, at the height of its power, had extended its control over a population of eighty millions. In 1889 the first century will have expired since the adoption of the Constitution which made the United States a nation. At that date, now very near, an American may have the proud consciousness of being a part of a nation equal in population, and vastly superior in resources, to those of a Power the greatest known in the past history of the world. It took the Romans more than a thousand years, with war and spoils, and every species of injustice, to build up their majestic fabric of empire. In less than a century, the Americans, by industry and a decent respect for God's law, have accomplished more, in whatever view the subject is regarded. Calming the impulses of an inordinate enthusiasm, we must at least exclaim that such results are indeed the marvel of all time. You will allow me to leave, for a moment, the themes usually discussed in these letters, to make these remarks, for they are suggested by conversations which I hear on every side at this time, when the great nation of the West is entering upon a new epoch of its history.

A SINGULAR ATTACK ON THE KING.

People who keep the run of the ois dit of the theaters and the town, have had this week something to amuse themselves with. The King was the hero of the incident, and although we are not in the habit of repeating gossiping trivialities, this little fact may serve for the tail of a letter. VICTOR EMMANUEL passes many of his evenings at the theater, and this time he was at the Politiama. In a box adjoining the royal loggia, some ladies, who had a fancy for the near atmosphere of the King, and a possible sovereign smile, had established themselves. One of them, so far forgetting the proprieties of the place, and the respect due to royalty, from behind the fortress of her fan began to let fly at the King smiles, familiar glances, and finally words of sweet and winsome tone. This royalty is gallant enough, as all the world knows, but never was royalty anywhere subjected in public to so outrageous an attack. The King's face became red, purple and black with rage, and the order was given for the box to be cleared. But the officer was not able to execute the order without a scene which attracted the attention of the whole theater; for who ever knew a resolute lady not disposed to stand up boldly for her real or supposed rights? This one left the field with a lofty air, stamping her protest with emphasis upon the floor, and beating it upon the wall with her chief fan. The box has since been bought by order of the King.

ANGELICO.

A Soldiers' Monument—Laying the Corner-Stone at Sleepy Hollow Cemetery.

The ceremony of laying the corner-stone of a monument in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery, to the memory of the brave soldiers who lost their lives during the late war, was held yesterday, under the auspices of Post Asher, No. 78, G. A. R. Large deputations from Brooklyn, Newburg, Nyack, Sing Sing, Spring Valley, Tarrytown, and other places, were present and took part in the ceremonies. The procession moved in the public square, opposite the railroad depot, in Tarrytown, and conducted to the cemetery, where the corner-stone was laid by Hon. MORRIS H. GRINNELL, after which Col. LAMMOT DUPONT delivered an eloquent oration appropriate to the occasion.

THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

gously for more than two days, from either exterior boundary of our jurisdiction, to reach the outward limits of the Roman Empire when thus placed, even when she claimed to be mistress of the world. The distinctive difference in the extension of Roman power and ours is in this: while she subjected so many countries to her laws, she restricted right of citizenship or share in the governing power to the people of Rome and Latium; or only parted with that franchise of citizenship as an almost priceless boon, or latest lay sale on the most exorbitant terms of purchase, so that her chief Captain said unto Paul, "With a great price obtained I this freedom," to which the Apostle could proudly reply, "But I was free-born."

In casting the horoscope of the future of our beloved land, may it not be well to observe whether we indeed are going forward in just accord with that glorious declaration of rights proclaimed ninety-four years ago, which has become the living charter of liberty to all nations of earth? Is it not the theory of our Government that we shall receive all who come to us animated by the love of liberty, and desire to enjoy its sweets? That this country is the home of all who, of their own volition, will come and abide and attach their fortunes, to take part and lot with us on this continent? Did not our fathers assume, in framing their Constitution of Government making this country an asylum for the oppressed of all nations, that it would be peopled only by those whose energy and enterprise in coming here of themselves would guarantee that their coming would make good citizens, fit to be entrusted with equal power with ourselves? May we not well inquire whether it is not a departure from that theory of population and absorption in our Government with equality of right and equality of power, not in consonance with the true developments of our principles of government that men united by race, by nurture, or political, social and industrial culture, to be transplanted to our Government—strangers to our civilization and subjects of another heretofore deemed semi-barbarous, without knowledge or enterprise, or enough of control of their own volition even, to bring themselves here—unknowing our language or any language coming from the same root—without knowledge of our institutions or any institutions which have any analogy thereto; without any religion or any religion that even looks to a common Father, should, to satisfy the avarice of men, by contract or by force, as serfs be carried here in countless thousands to antagonize and depreciate the labor and industries of our sons and either to take part in our Government, or, if in slavery, be sacrificed forever?

History ever repeats herself. The English ship that brought over a few African slaves, because of the scarcity of labor for raising tobacco in the Virginia plantations, and because white labor demanded too high a price, seemed to the men of that day to freight a boon and a blessing. There was no sign, no cloud on the political horizon even so large as a man's hand. The profits for the venture seemed so large, the advantages to be derived from the great increase of wealth, from the increase in productions, gave argument quite unanswerable. Remember that an eminent divine introduced African slavery into the New World as a matter of great humanity. The same farseeing statesmanship, the most progressive theories of political economy, saw in this undertaking no seed or source of danger to the common weal. But though the importation of African labor was very early stopped by the most stringent enactments, in how short a time the small cloud spread itself out, rolled athwart the heavens, developed into tempest and storm, the consequences of which no wisdom could forecast, and from which no power could shield; so terrible that the country almost went down in night and darkness, and nothing but the patriotism of our people, nerving itself to a life-death struggle with wrong, and treason, after four years of war, such as man never fought and the like of which never brought woe to woman, saved us in our pristine state of plenty, strength and peace. What was the philosophic cause for this great effect? The light of experience now teaches, because an nhomogeneous, an unnatural, an unproductive because unexpending system of labor and class of laborers had been introduced among us not by volunteer immigration but by forced importation tending to raise up two classes of society—the very rich and the very poor, the industrious and the idle who feed without return upon industry—both incompatible with true republican institutions.

Would it not be wise, then, for our statesmen to examine with care, to foresee, as far as Heaven has permitted men to pierce the future, what will be the effect, what the result, and where the end we shall reach by the importation by contract or purchase of laboring men from any land, and, more, that all that, from a semi-barbarous one; men who are to be tasked laborers only, forever, and who are therefore not men, but merchandise? Shall we wait until the system of contract labor has taken as deep root in our soil as that other system of servile labor had done before we force and choke the evil? We deal now with the industrial and economic view of the question, but with the far broader and grander one of its high political aspects. Let us not, by any means, hinder or prohibit the voluntary coming to this country of all men who choose to add their labor, their energies and their industry in aid of our own. No one ever complained of the negro who came here of his own free will. From his so coming arose neither wrong nor danger to freedom or the perpetuity of free institutions; but the negro, brought here as a commercial speculation, wrought the so great difficulties from which the country has so suffered. The highest pursuit in this country is intellignt labor. It is not reputable to be without regular and constant employment. Who so works with head or hands is here the nobleman. The cunning artisan is the prince. All here are equal—all are sovereigns. It is, therefore, the highest province of statesmanship, the loftiest duty of patriotism, the hope of freedom, and the promise of the regeneration of nations to take care that in America labor be neither degraded nor enthralled.

REMARKS BY EX-GOV. HAWLEY.

At the close of Gen. BUTLER's remarks, Senator BUCKINGHAM introduced Ex-Gov. HAWLEY, who alluded to the speech of Gen. BUTLER, and said he wished to reply to some of the General's remarks touching the subject of Chinese immigration:

"I don't know," he said, "how to go to work to lock the doors of the United States. We have done what we could and stopped American slavery. I wish the Chinese had a better education in regard to American institutions. I wish they could bring with them a better religion; but I believe they all can read. With one flag over them—the Bible—New Testament, in my hand, I say, let them come." He wished that they were in better condition; but he did not see how he could shut the gates against any down-trodden people who wished to flee to the protection of American institutions. He said he would occupy the few remaining moments in singing on his fellow-citizens the great importance of keeping open the gateways of the United States to the free access of all immigrating people. He would ever guard our interests against the least approach to the slave trade, but could see no injury to any of our useful institutions in encouraging industrial immigration to our shores from every part of the earth. He would keep the gate open and the stream as pure as possible, and let it flow. We must counteract any evil that may threaten us by our living examples of good. We must impress a pure and undefiled religion on all who may come to us; and if any go back to their own lands they will carry to their neighbors the blessings of our free institutions. We would not dare to lock the inviting gates of America against a suffering world.

Gen. BUTLER seemed somewhat uncomfortable at these remarks, and said to the Chairman, "I want to reply to that," but the band, in honor of the Russian Minister, played the "Russian Hymn."

THANKS FROM THE RUSSIAN MINISTER.

At the conclusion, the Russian Minister returned his thanks, and spoke of the friendship which had existed between Russia and the United States from the earliest history of this country. He hoped that friendship would be perpetual. In saying this he expressed the feelings of 82,000,000 of Russians, and he hoped that feeling was reciprocated by 40,000,000 of Americans.

PLANTING OF A TREE.

The exercises closed with the singing of "America" by the entire audience, accompanied by the band. Subsequently President GRANT assisted in planting an elm-tree, near the Elwood Hall Female Seminary, the President holding the tree, while Mr. BEECHER, Senator BUCKINGHAM, the Russian Minister and one or two ladies shoveled to the earth upon the roots. At 6 o'clock the Presidential party left Woodstock in carriages for the Putnam Station, where they took the cars for Norwich.

CELEBRATIONS ELSEWHERE.

The Fourth of July in Europe—Observance by Americans in France and Germany.

PARIS, July 4.—There was a meeting of Americans, today, on the grounds of Dr. THOS. W. EVANS, to celebrate the National Anniversary. Ex-Gov. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, presided, and remarks were made by Consul-General READ, Cols. HOFFMAN and MOORE, of the United States Legation, Mr. MURAT HALSTEAD, of the Cincinnati Commercial, Dr. EVANS and others. Minister WASHBURNE was unable to be present. The assemblage was a very large one. The American Club held a reception during the day, and illuminated their building at night.

STUTTGART, July 4.—The Americans sojourning in this and neighboring cities had a grand celebration here today. At the banquet Consul YOUNG, of Baden, presided, and patriotic speeches were made by Consul KLAUPRECHT, of Stuttgart, Col. TODD, and Messrs. ARNOLD KAIOHER, JOSEPH BECKEL, CHARLES ROUTH and others. The occasion was a great success.

In Boston—The Rowing and Sailing Regattas—The Winners and the Times.

BOSTON, July 4.—The usual Fourth of July celebrations were fully carried out today and greatly enjoyed by the citizens and many thousands from the country around. The weather was cool and delightful. The annual oration was delivered in Music Hall by Wm. EVERETT. The regular Fourth of July rowing regatta took place on Charles River. The course was tolerably smooth. The first race was for Whitehall boats, distance two miles, for which there were four entries. The P. C. Gilmore, rowed by L. McKENNEY and JOHN G. MCKENNEY, came first in in 18:37½; North End Boy, by JOHN EVANS and ROBERT KENNELY, second, and the Tuscata, by JAMES MCGEE and GEORGE JACKSON, third. In the second race for single sculls the entries were THOMAS DOYLE, JR., WALTER BROWN and T. C. BUTLER. Brown won easily in 13:42; Doyle, second. In the third race, double sculls, two miles, there were four entries. The BUTLER BROTHERS won in the A. C. Pike in 12:43½; C. O. BURKART and W. A. THOMPSON, in the Tacita, second. For the fourth race, four-oared working boats, distance two miles, there were three entries, mostly local crews. The George B. McClellan, pulled by P. MCGARRY, F. CLARKE, W. DAVIS and E. O'NEIL, came in first in 14:34½. The fifth race was for four-oared sculls, three miles, for which there were four entries. The Thomas Murphy, pulled by WALTER BROWN, stroke; F. C. BUTLER, JOHN BIGLIN and BARNEY BIGLIN, won in 20:34½; the Harvard crew, second in 20:35½. The Charles H. Duson was withdrawn from the race soon after starting, and the Thomas J. Ward was overturned in rounding the stake-boat. The Harvards rowed in a lapstreak boat, which was too heavy for such a race. Both the boats in which WALTER BROWN pulled were built by himself.

The sailing regatta from off City Point was the best that has been given by the City. The sky was clear, the wind moderate from the east and the water comparatively smooth. Six yachts entered for the first race, measuring 35 feet and more. The course was twenty-three miles to windward and return. The start was made at 4:04, and the winning yacht returned in 3:40:40, the following order: Cossack, Commodore BOSS, New-York-built, of Beverly, 15 ft. 22 in. 34 s.; Sadie, center board built by HENNESSEY, 4 ft. 37 in. 49 s.; Psyche, keel sloop, 5 ft. 29 in. 20 s.; Fearless, sloop, of Bath, Me., 5 ft. 30 in. 56 s. The Psyche dropped a man, which detained her three minutes. Allowance of time gave the Sadie the first prize over the Cossack for center-boards, and the Psyche took the keel premium. The second race was for boats between twenty-six and thirty-eight feet measurement. Twenty started, and fourteen were timed over a sixteen-mile course. The winners were the Violet and Ripple, center-boards, and the Mist and Starlight keels, after measurement allowances were made. The race was very close. Fifty-three boats were entered for the third race, and forty-two started. The course was thirteen miles, and was within the range of vision from one point. The boats were all well together, and twenty-four were timed. The winners were the Pearl, Sweet, center boards, and the Mischief and Volante, keels.

RICHMOND, Va., July 4.—Rain fell nearly all day. There was no public demonstration except the parade of the colored societies.

CHARLESTON, S. C., July 4.—The Fourth was generally observed here as a holiday, the celebration and parade being confined mainly to the colored people.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., July 4.—The day was observed by the closing of stores, banks, &c., as usual. A Republican meeting, which had been advertised for several weeks, was held. A row took place over the dinner, in which several negroes were cut, and some dangerously.

LONG BRANCH, July 4.—The Fourth of July was duly celebrated here by the firing of cannons and a display of flags from the Metropolitan, Continental, Clarendon, Howland and West End hotels, and all the cottages. In the afternoon Hon. JOHN O. BARNES read the Declaration of Independence in front of the Continental Hotel to a large gathering of visitors. In the evening fire-works were set off in front of the hotels, and a grand ball was given at the Clarendon Hotel, which was attended by the Elite of Long Branch. Five trains of cars, loaded with people, arrived during the day, nearly filling the hotels beyond their capacity.

FRANK WILLIAMS, thirteen years of age, of No. 22 West Fifteenth-street, while discharging a small cannon, at the corner of Fourteenth-street and Eighth-avenue, was badly burned about the head and face.

GEORGE and JOHN WURTHES, brothers, aged thirteen and fifteen years, of No. [illegible] Eighth-street, were severely burned by fire-crackers.

CHARLES MCINTYRE, seven years of age, of No. 115 Eighth-avenue, was shot through the wrist by some unknown person carelessly firing a pistol in the street. The wound is not dangerous.

ALFRED BIRCHARD, aged sixteen, of No. 377 Sixth-avenue, was thrown from his horse at the corner of Twenty-third-street and Eighth-avenue, and seriously injured. He was taken home.

WILLIAM HOODER, aged four years, living at Twenty-sixth-street and Third-avenue, was shot through his hand. Taken home.

Fire-works ignited the frame house No. 823 West Seventeenth-street; damage trifling.

One of the many bullets flying about the City last evening passed through the new gas tank in Twentieth-street, near First-avenue, causing a serious loss and horrible smell by the escape of gas through the hole which it made.

The premises of No. 9 Clark-street, occupied by ROSE SHANY as a candy-store, were ignited last evening by fire-works. Damage to stock, $100; not insured; to building, $50, which is insured.

At 830 P. M. the carcass of the house No. 54 Amity-street was ignited by fire-balls, but the flames were extinguished before much damage was done.

EDWARD FAGGEN, of No. 408 West Forty-fourth-street, fell from a tree in Elm Park, and was seriously injured. He was taken home.

FIGHTING, SHOOTING, STABBING.

Knives and Pistols Freely Used—A Number of Bar-room Fights.

There were numerous disturbances during the afternoon and evening in various parts of the City, yesterday, when the knife, pistol and nature's weapons were freely used without much regard to consequences. It happened, however, that none of them had a fatal result, as will be seen from the following list, which embraces the more important affrays that took place.

LUDWIG MOORE was severely stabbed in the arm by CHRISTIAN ECKERSONS, during a fracas early in the evening in the saloon of MARTIN MUMBACK, No. 84 West Twenty-sixth-street. The injured man was taken to Bellevue Hospital, and the assailant was locked up in the Sixteenth Precinct Station-house.

Yesterday afternoon an affray occurred in a lager-beer saloon in Third-avenue, between Seventy-ninth and Eighteenth-streets, and a general fight ensued, in which JAMES CASEY, of Bergen, N.J., had his nose bitten off. No arrests were made, and the Police of the Twenty-third Precinct do not appear to have heard of the affair until CASEY appeared at the Station-house.

FRANK J. FAIRFIELD, of No. 288 Third-avenue, was stabbed three times in the body, last evening, by some unknown person during an affray at Jones' Wood. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital. The assailant was not discovered by Capt. GUNNIS.

A difficulty occurred on last evening at the corner of West Broadway and York street, during which, PATRICK CARROLL of No. 380 Greenwich-street was knocked down by a colored man, and received a severe scalp wound. He was taken home and the assailant escaped.

An altercation occurred at an early hour of the morning in the Centre-street Market, between No. 179 Clinton-street, which resulted in JAMES W. RICKS being shot in the left breast by THOMAS R. NATHAWAY, who was arrested. The wounded man was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

A party of coons, yesterday afternoon, at Lion Park, assaulted Officer MCINTYRE, of the Thirty-first Precinct, and rescued a prisoner whom he had arrested for disorderly conduct. In self-defence, he drew his revolver, and fired into the gang, wounding one of them, whom he then took to the Station-house in One Hundredth-street. He gave his name as JAMES MCCLARA, and the wound being found to be slight, he was locked up, and will be arraigned at the Yorkville Police Court.

The Ocean Yacht Race—Start of the Cambria and Dauntless—The American Ahead for Twenty Miles—Active Betting.

QUEENSTOWN, July 4.—The yachts Cambria and Dauntless have started on their ocean race. They reached Daunt's Rock in tow at 2 o'clock this afternoon, where they found the yachts Sappho and Gwendolin awaiting them. The weather was fine, and a strong west-by-north breeze was blowing. At 2½ P. M. the first gun was fired, and the Cambria and Dauntless dropped off from their tugs. Five minutes afterward the Dauntless shot ahead, keeping the lead for twenty miles, when the Cambria tacked with the wind, and seemed to get ahead of the Dauntless. The wind had changed, and was strong from the south-west. The general opinion is, that with a quiet sea and favoring wind the American will win the race, but if the weather should turn rough victory for the Cambria is certain. Much interest is felt in the contest, and the betting on the result is active.

Both yachts started under main and foresails and jibs, the Cambria carrying in addition her gaff topsail. The Cambria was placed a cable's length on the weather quarter of the American. Both started on the starboard tack. The Cambria sailed badly, and the Dauntless made much leeway, showing inferior weatherly qualities. At the expiration of twenty minutes the Cambria went round on the port tack. The Dauntless held on the starboard tack five minutes longer, and then followed the Englishman. The weather now became thick, and when last seen the Cambria had again crossed the Dauntless. The latter appeared to be the fastest of the two, but the Cambria showed better weatherly qualities.

The writer adds that the transactions of the Erie Railway Company and the bribing of the Courts of law account for the fact that New-York City bonds can find no home market. There is a noteworthy communication in the Economist, which anticipates the report of the Paris High Council of Commerce on international coinage. The correspondent states that thirty out of thirty-seven witnesses who appeared before the Council urged strongly the adoption of the twenty-five franc coin as the unitary gold piece, and the discontinuance of the five franc silver piece. The Council will recommend that these views be carried into practical effect.

British Parliament—Object of the Red River Expedition not Conquest—Proceedings in the House of Commons.

LONDON, July 4.—In the House of Lords, to-night, the Marquis of CLANRICARDE moved for the production by the Government of a letter from Rev. Mr. CORBETT, a land-owner in the Red River District, giving a detailed account of the causes of the rebellion. Earl GRANVILLE stated that the expedition sent to that territory was not for conquest, but to effect the transfer of the country from the Hudson's Bay Company to the Crown. The motion was withdrawn. The Ecclesiastical Presentment bill was read a second time, and after the passage of various local measures their Lordships adjourned. In the House of Commons Sir C. W. DILKE gave notice of a motion to abolish the sinecure of Lord Privy Seal. Mr. GLADSTONE moved the postponement of the Parliamentary Elections bill until the 14th inst., when the possibility of considering that and other important measures this session could be ascertained. He said several bills had already been abandoned for want of time. The University Tests' bill was taken up in committee. Mr. BENTINCK moved an amendment that nothing in the bill open office to any person not a member of the Church of England, when such office was intended for a member of that communion. The amendment was opposed by the Solicitor-General, and lost.

The third reading of the bill was fixed for the 8th inst. The Education bill was taken up in Committee. Sir C. W. DILKE moved as an amendment that the rate-payers and not the Town Council shall choose the School Board. An animated debate followed, at the conclusion of which the amendment was negatived by a vote of 150 to 145. Mr. FORSTER accepted an amendment that the rate-payers and not the vestry, shall choose the School Board. After further discussion of an unimportant character, the House adjourned.

A Fight Near Puerto Principe—The Cubans Repulsed—Capture of the Rest of Lone's Party—The Colonel Killed after a Desperate Hand-to-Hand Fight.

HAVANA, July 4.—The rebel leader, BERMETA, entered the Puerto Principe jurisdiction again on the 27th ult. The loyal guerrillas started in pursuit, and led to his camp by a rebel prisoner, a sharp fight ensued, lasting an hour and a half. BERMETA, after reforming his line three times, was finally routed. Sixteen Spaniards and forty-six Cubans were killed. BERMETA's force numbered six hundred. The commanding officer in the Holguin District reports that he has captured the seven remaining men of the second George B. Upton expedition, and that they are now in jail at Holguin. He also states that the rebel Colonel, LONO, who commanded the filibusters, was killed by a corporal and two soldiers, after a desperate resistance, during which the corporal was badly wounded. Owing to the heavy arrivals of corn at Havana, the market is flooded, and prices have declined. Freights to the United States are buoyant—per box of sugar, $1 25.

THE STEAM-BOAT RACE

Arrival of the Steamers at St. Louis—The Lee Wins by Three Hours and Forty-four Minutes.

ST. LOUIS, July 4.—The steamer Robert E. Lee arrived here at 11:25 A. M., three days, eighteen hours and fourteen minutes from New-Orleans, beating the Natchez's time on her last trip three hours and forty-four minutes, and the James M. Wade's famous time four hours and fifty-five minutes. The Natchez was detained by a heavy fog below Grand Tower, 120 miles below here, and did not pass that point until 8¼ A. M. The trip was an ovation, from first to last, all along the river. Thousands flocked from many miles in the interior to see the racers pass; and bonfires, cannon, anvils, and everything that could shoot, were brought into use to give vent to the feeling on the occasion. The crowd at the levee here was immense. The banks of the river, from Carondelet to above the city, a distance of six miles, were lined with people, and the windows and house-tops along the city front were filled with enthusiastic spectators. No similar event ever caused such an excitement or brought out such crowds. A million dollars, probably, changed hands on the result of the race. The Natchez, as before stated, is detained by a dense fog below Grand Tower, and has not yet (6 P. M.) arrived.

Railroad Collision at Tarrytown.

The Rochester express train on the Hudson River Railroad came into collision with three empty passenger cars at Tarrytown, shortly after 5 o'clock, yesterday afternoon, causing considerable damage, besides a very long delay among the regular trains going North and South. A Poughkeepsie way train, which arrived at the station about the time, or behind time, was in the act of backing to take on the empty cars when the smash occured. It was asserted by the flagman at the place, that the regular signal of danger was given; but Mr. SAUNDERS, engineer of the express train, claimed that he did not notice it, not being aware of the presence of the other train until he had turned the curve just above the depot. He applied the patent safety breaks on the cars as soon as he saw the danger ahead, and behaved in a very commendable manner, stowing the train and maintaining his post in the midst of the crash and jam of the cars. One of forty-five cars was upturned, and another was lifted on the top of the engine. Some injuries were sustained by a passenger who was in the detached cars, he being the only occupant. WILLIAM P. O'HOURKE, a fireman on the express train, was hurt about the head and feet in jumping from the engine. The disaster happened just as the empty cars were about to be filled with passengers. The loss to the Railway Company will amount to several thousand dollars.

[illegible] Brooklyn, on the morning of the 30th ult., while attempting to board a moving train, fell from a platform and was seriously injured. He was taken home by his friends.

WASHINGTON.

The Senate's Search—A Bitter Debate—The Chinese Question—The Cherokee Indians—Alaska and Pacific Railroad Bill.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, July 4.—The Senate spent a profitless day upon the Naturalization bill, remaining in session from 11 o'clock until 8¼ o'clock, when a recess was taken until this evening. No votes were taken except to reject a few motions to adjourn, which came from the Democratic side. But the debate was exceedingly sharp and interesting. Mr. CONKLING made an effort at the outset to get rid of the perplexing question of Chinese naturalization, so as to have a vote upon the simple bill which came from the Committee, but Mr. SUMNER constitutionally barred the way; so he was criticised somewhat severely, though courteously, for imperiling by his self-will a measure of such importance. Mr. SUMNER replied in a speech of same length, ornately rhetorical, treating largely of himself and his record, characterizing Mr. CONKLING's course as mean and grovelling, and accusing Mr. STEWART, whose views upon Chinese suffrage had excited his wrath, of denying the faith, and comparing him to Simon Peter, the familiar history of whose recreancy he read at length from the Bible. Mr. STEWART replied briefly but sturdily; and the status and rights of the Celestials were discussed by Messrs. Williams, Edmunds, Carpenter, Corbett, Wilson and Trumbull, the afternoon closing with another sharp passage between Messrs. CONKLING and SUMNER. Much bitterness has been excited by the discussion, and the Chinese question was carried from the Senate into the street cars when the recess was taken.

THE CHEROKEE INDIANS.

The Senate Committee of Indian Affairs have agreed to a joint resolution, which was reported today by Mr. ROSS, providing for the removal of the Cherokee Indians of North Carolina to the Cherokee lands in the Indian Territory; and providing for the payment to each of them of $83 with interest. The last provision is intended to satisfy a long standing claim to a share in the proceeds of lands belonging to the Cherokee Nation, and sold under the treaty of 1835.

THE FUNDING BILL.

The Funding bill was received in the Senate today, and referred to the Committee on Finance, and the Fortifications bill was reported, without amendment, from the Committee on Appropriations.

THE ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD BILL.

The Senate considered the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad bill for a short time today, and agreed to an amendment that the benefits of the act shall be conditional upon the completion of the road in 1878.

THE FOURTH.

There has been no celebration here today, except a colored Sunday-school celebration, in which the various denominations of colored Protestant churches joined, and, save for the occasional bursting of fire-crackers, the day outside the Capitol would be undistinguished from Sunday.

FORTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

SENATE...WASHINGTON, Monday, July 4.

Immediately after assembling a motion to adjourn was voted down by a tie vote—yeas, 20; nays 20.

THE FUNDING BILL.

The Funding bill was received from the House, referred to the Finance Committee and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ROSS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a joint resolution to provide for the removal of the Cherokee Indians in North Carolina to the Cherokee lands West of the Mississippi River. It provides for the payment to each Indian of $83, with interest thereon, as stipulated in the treaty of 1835.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported without amendment the bill making appropriations for fortifications.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported, with an amendment, the bill granting lands in aid of the Boat River and Salt Lake Canal Company.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CARPENTER introduced a bill to regulate appeals in proceedings in bankruptcy. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HARRIS offered a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information relating to the removal of JAMES F. CASEY, Collector of Customs at New-Orleans, as to the manner in which and CASEY has discharged his duties, the number of employes in said Custom-house during each month from April, 1869, to February, 1870, inclusive, and if any persons were employed during said time without authority of law, the amount paid, &c. Also, concerning the management of the Custom-house in each month from 1866 to 1869, and the amount of imports and exports at said port during those years. Adopted.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD BILL.

The Atlantic and Pacific Railroad bill was briefly considered and amended to make the action conditional upon the completion of the entire road by 1878. An amendment to prevent encroachments upon Indian reservations by any land grants to the Company, was discussed without action.

NATURALIZATION.

At 12:20 o'clock the Naturalization bill was taken up.

Mr. SUMNER's amendment, striking the word "white" from the Naturalization laws, making them apply equally to all foreigners, having been adopted, the question recurred on Mr. WILLIAMS' amendment, to exclude the Chinese from the benefits of the pending legislation.

Mr. STEWART continued his remarks against the admission of Chinese naturalization upon an equal footing with all other foreigners. While he would protect the Chinese in their personal rights, he would never sanction the introduction of a system of slave labor in competition with white labor in this country, which was the question at issue in the amendment. He would not interfere to prevent the immigration of Chinese who came voluntarily; but he would never agree to invest with political power imported coolie slaves, brought here under contracts, and who, as Parsees, could not take our oaths. There was no necessity for the legislation at issue in the bill, as enforced by the Fifteenth Amendment had secured the Chinese in every right to which they were entitled.

Mr. CONKLING appealed to Mr. SUMNER to withdraw his amendment, which could be done by unanimous consent. He regarded it as jeopardising the whole bill, the importance of which to the country in preventing naturalization frauds in every city and elsewhere, could not be over-estimated.

Mr. SUMNER declined to withdraw his amendment. He read a number of letters from colored residents of the United States from abroad complaining of their exclusion from naturalization. He argued that his amendment was to cover these cases, and thought of those of the Chinese. He argued that the restriction of the privilege of naturalization to white men was in derogation of the principles of the Declaration of Independence, that all men are created equal. He then read from the New Testament relative to Peter's denial of his Master, and remarked that a Republican Senator (meaning Mr. CONKLING) was in danger of the fate of the Apostle.

Mr. STEWART replied the charge of apostacy was not to be tolerated from the Senator from Massachusetts, as he had read from the Christian Bible in support of his proposition to commit our institutions to the control of Pagans, the enemies of Christianity, who could not be bound by a Christian obligation or oath.

Mr. WILLIAMS contended that the Declaration of Independence did not mean that the wild men of South America, the heathen and the cannibal races to be allowed equal political rights under the Government with the citizens of the United States. He regarded Mr. SUMNER's interpretation of that instrument as foolish and absurd. The authors had declared all men created equal; but they had also declared that it was the right and duty of a nation so to organize the powers of the Government as should seem most likely to effect its safety and happiness. If it was the judgment of the American people that it was to their safety to exclude Chinese from participation in our Government, it was their duty so to decide. The framers of the Constitution had created a political distinction among citizens by preventing a foreigner from becoming President, and in regard to eligibility as Congressmen; and would the Senator from Massachusetts assert that that distinction was a violation of the principles of the Declaration of Independence? Did not every man know that if the Government was to destroy every political distinction between the native and foreign-born citizens, it would be overwhelmed by absorption of political power in the hands of its enemies, the subjects of foreign Governments?

Mr. SUMNER, in reply to an inquiry on the point, admitted Congress could refuse to pass any Naturalization law, but insisted that such law, if passed, might be in harmony with the Declaration of Independence, that there could be no distinction of color.

Mr. WILLIAMS said he understood the Senator to say that Congress had jurisdiction over the question of naturalization; but that the Declaration of Independence came in and controlled the judgment of Congress, and therefore left no discretion.

Mr. SUMNER explained that he meant no discrimination on account of color. He was not prepared to say Congress might not, through

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

The Grand Park sale, which took place yesterday, was a second great success for the enterprise; 102 lots were disposed of at $6,438 average price of over $125 per lot, and in the aggregate bringing $65,676. The details will be found in full below; but the delay in reaching the City was such, and the hour of arrival so late, that it is impossible to make an extended notice of the sale. The will be done to-morrow. A report of WECKORT & LITTLE'S sale at Valley Stream, L. I., has not as yet been received.

Separate sealed proposals will be received at this Department until 12 o'clock Friday, July 22, 1870, for building one side-wheel steamer of about 1,000 tons, for the revenue marine service, for the Pacific coast, to be delivered at the port of San Francisco.

Measurements for tonnage to be according to the old Custom-house rule, taking the length on load line from forward part of stem to after part of stern-post, breadth of beam molded, and depth from under part of deck to top of ceiling.

General specifications for the above vessel will be furnished bidders on application at Custom-house at Boston, New-York, Philadelphia, Baltimore and San Francisco.

Favorable consideration will be given to bids in accordance with the rate of speed guaranteed in excess of the above specified speed.

The work will be carried on under the personal supervision of an agent of the Treasury Department, and all facilities must be afforded him for inspecting the materials and workmanship. Such parts of either as are not in accordance with the drawings and specifications will be rejected, and must be made good by the contractor.

No bids will be considered for this vessel, except from parties regularly engaged in iron-ship building.

The Department reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

Each bid must be accompanied by a written guarantee signed by the bidder and a competent surety, (certified to be such by some officer known to the office or the Treasury,) that in the event of the acceptance of such bid, the necessary contract will be entered into within ten days after notice is given by this office that such bid has been accepted, and for the faithful execution of the contract.

Any bidder may be present and witness the opening of the bids.

(The party whose bid is accepted will be required to furnish a working model, with the detailed plans and specifications, before the contract is closed.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS,

THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

handled their little wooden guns with considerable proficiency. The Guard was reviewed by the Commissioners, and the regular programme of the day was proceeded with. It was commenced by Warden STEVENS, who read that old-time document, the Declaration of Independence, in a clear voice, much to the edification of the juveniles. The entire school of girls and boys, comprising 400 voices, then sang "Unfurl the Glorious Banner," with striking effect. Master TIMOTHY O'BRIEN, the Orator of the Day, next delivered an address in honor of the Fourth, which effort proved a decided success, although the audience could scarcely follow the utterance of the juvenile orator, so rapidly did he pour forth the words written for him. The remainder of the celebration programme was then carried out, as follows: Song, "Where Has Luis Gone?" 400 children; ode, "American Boy," Masters MARTIN and SMITH; song, "Happy Hearts," 400 children; poem, "Sword of Bunker Hill," Master McDONALD; song, "Let Us Seek the Sweet Bowers," 400 children, "There's a Good Time Coming," Masters COLEMAN and SAVAGE; song, "Fling Out the Starry Banner White," large girls; dialogue comique, Masters FINNEGAN and WALKER; "A Few Stray Words, Occurrences on the Fourth of July," Miss NELLIE GILMORE; song, Exale, "'Tis Well We Should be Gay," 400 children.

The children then proceeded to the refectory, and sat down to the "table d'hôte," as Warden STEVENS termed it. The repast consisted of fresh mutton, stewed with potatoes, with salad and other vegetables, and good bread and butter, the dessert consisting of candies and cakes. Having satisfied their youthful and healthy appetites, the children were dismissed to the green, and provided with a liberal supply of torpedoes and fire-crackers. The evening was marked by the display of a few brilliant skyrockets.

The Day Among the Germans.

The Germans of this City yesterday made full and free use of the inalienable right of the pursuit of happiness guaranteed to all by the Declaration of Independence. They attended in large numbers picnics, concerts, and Summer-nights festivals in the several pleasure-gardens and parks within the City limits and in the neighborhood. Many also participated in steam-boat excursions. On all these occasions they enjoyed their accustomed and well-known amusements. The largest gathering of Germans of this City took place at Jones' Wood in the afternoon. There the New-York Turnverein, Mr. CONRAD KUHN, President, celebrated its twentieth anniversary, which was attended by about 10,000 persons. In the forenoon a procession started from Turner Hall, 111 Orchard-street, near Canal, in which the active members of the society (who participate in the gymnastic exercises) appeared, dressed in linen suits, their regular Summer costume at excursions, and the two rifle companies of the Society, also in linen coats. The procession, in which, besides the Turners, a goodly number of Germans singing societies of this City participated, marched through several streets in the eastern portion of the City, and then embarked on a barge, attached to a steam-boat, at the foot of Eighth-street, East River, for the park. At the park the festival was opened in the afternoon by the Turners, who performed a variety of gymnastic exercises in a very able manner at the Belvidere. The rest of the festival consisted of dancing, singing by the several German vocal societies, target shooting, and various other amusements. Everything went off well. The park was decorated with American and German flags, and the flags of the several singing societies present.

The Day in Brooklyn—A Quiet Celebration—The Fire-Works—Accidents.

The fact that the ninety-fourth anniversary of our national existence had put in an appearance was duly announced, yesterday morning, at daybreak, by the firing of 100 guns from the summit of Fort Greene, accompanied by the usual explosion of juvenile fire-works. At the same time, though in singular contrast to the din thus created, the chimes of St. Ann's, on the heights, rung out in merry peals the national air; and, as if bewitched by the sound, immediately after, most of the surrounding houses threw out the national colors to the breeze. The City Hall and Court-house looks up through a wilderness of bunting as innocently as if the Goddess of Liberty, and not HUGH MCLAUGHLIN, controlled them. The ships in the harbor hung out, in honor of the day, all the spare signals they could scrape together, so that, looked at from the heights, not only the City, but the sea seemed to be doing honor to the day. Apart, however, from these manifestations of patriotism on the Fourth of July, it may be safely said, has not in many years passed off more quietly than it did in this city yesterday. The roughs and loafers who usually succeed in making day as well as night hideous, betook themselves almost in a body, at an early hour, to the various parks and excursion grounds in and in the vicinity thereof, where, without disturbing any person in particular, they drank and fought so much that when they returned they felt more disposed to sleep than get up disturbances. In some of the more retired streets, but for the occasional outbreak of youthful hilarity, things presented more the appearance of a Sunday than a holiday. At sunset, however, the streets became more crowded; old and young began to wend their way toward the points where the Common Council had determined to show itself in powder. Fort Greene, Carroll Park and Satellite Pond were filled to their utmost capacity, and, indeed, most of the surrounding streets were so crowded that travel became next to impossible. In view of that, those who had good positions retained them, and those who had not looked as philosophically as possible over their neighbors' shoulders. The programmes were, of course, those published in the TIMES yesterday. In respect to the carrying of them out it may be said that they elicited the usual quantity of applause, and were conducted with the customary amount of skill. The casualties throughout the city were decidely smaller than on the same day last year. The following are the cases as they occurred:

THOMAS NICHOLAS, six years of age, residing corner of Clinton and State streets, was slightly burned in the thigh, about 10 A. M., yesterday, by the ignition of a package of crackers which he had in his pocket.

CHARLES JACOBS and HENRY WHITE, two boys living on the corner of Broadway and Lexington-street, E. D., were severely burned about the head and face by the explosion of a paper of powder which JACOBS held in his hands, and into which a spark of fire had accidentally fallen.

Early in the morning the fire-alarm was rung through a slight mistake on the part of some citizens who mistook a burning fire-cracker stand for a house. Some one had carelessly shaken his cigar over the stand in question, situated at No. 159 Flatbush-avenue, and caused it to ignite. The loss was $15.

One of the window shades in COLTON'S dental establishment, by some unknown cause, was on fire about mid day, but the flames were extinguished without serious damage.

About 10 A. M. a boy named ZEPHYRUS LOWERY, residing on Deane-street, near Underhill-avenue, had his right hand severely burned by the sudden explosion of a bundle of fire-crackers which he held in his hand. He had accidentally touched them with a match.

GEORGE W. LAURENCE, nine years of age, residing at No. 112 Hewes-street, about 9 o'clock, had his leg badly burned by the explosion of a lot of torpedoes which he had in his pocket. He caused them to ignite by falling on them.

MICHAEL RYAN, sixteen years of age, residing in Stillman-street, near Park-avenue, in firing a large pistol, blew off the first and second fingers of his left hand. He was taken to the City Hospital.

GEORGE ANDERSON, residing at No. 292 South Fifth-street, was accidentally shot in the nose by one of his companions with a pistol loaded with blank cartridge.

About 10 A. M. JAMES CAIN, a conductor on the Atlantic-avenue cars, while standing on the steps of his car as it passed along the avenue near Henry-street, was shot in the calf of the leg by some unknown person. He was taken to the City Hospital, where the bullet was extracted.

GEORGE LAWRENCE, a boy of six years old, residing at No. 112 Huger-street, Brooklyn, E. D., while crossing the street to go home, missed his footing and fell down, with his pocket full of Colton's torpedoes, which exploded, blowing his thigh apart in a terrible manner. The wounds received were about eight inches in length and four in breadth.

About 8 o'clock in the evening fire broke out in a dwelling-house at No. 23 East Baltic-street, supposed to have been started by some fire-crackers that were thrown in at the windows while the family were at the top of the house. Loss $3,000; insured in the Phœnix, of Brooklyn.

ENGLEBERT MACK, twenty-six years of age, residing on Twenty-first-street, shot himself in the mouth with a pistol, whether intentionally or not could not be ascertained, he being rendered unconscious. He was sent to the City Hospital.

WILLIAM PUSKINS, while under the influence of liquor, assaulted and injured ROSAMOND DONAGHER with a piece of iron, for which he was arrested in the Ninth Precinct.

WILLIAM EARNEST, ten years of age, residing in Douglas-street, while setting off some fire-works, had his right hand badly burned, the result of which, it is feared, will be death.

PARKER BUTLER, residing on Prospect-avenue, near Washington-street, shot Mrs. BRUSH through the hand. He is partially insane, and was at the time under the influence of liquor.

The Day at Staten Island.

Vast numbers of New-Yorkers spent the day on Staten Island. There was a grand celebration at Rossville, which included dancing, refreshments, and an eloquent oration by Mr. OSCAR SAWYER. The Declaration of Independence was read and saluted, and in the evening fire-works closed the festivities.

A large crowd assembled at Fort Wadsworth to witness the salute from the guns, which were fired by Sergt. COOKE, of the First United States Artillery, at noon. Not a single carriage, private or hack, was left idle during the day. There was no rowdyism, with the exception of a few free fights in the vicinity of Stapleton.

The only accident reported was the burning of a cottage, near Southfield, Tompkinsville, inhabited by Mr. JOHN BURNS. The roof was entirely destroyed, and some of the furniture damaged. The cause was fire-works thrown on the roof by boys.

The Neptune Boat Club celebrated the day with a boat-race from their club-house at West Brighton.

The illuminations in several of the private residences along the north shore were exceedingly pretty, and the Sailors' Snug Harbor looked tasteful with the number of Chinese lamps which hung suspended from the branches of the surrounding trees. The new Police did their duty in an admirable manner, exceeding the best anticipations of their friends.

The Day in New-Jersey.

Newark celebrated the Fourth yesterday with more than usual demonstrations. Bells were rung and salutes were fired at sunrise noon and sunset. A grand procession was formed on Military Park at 9 o'clock A. M., and moved in the following order: Gen. PLUMB and Staff, Jefferson Brass Band, Fifth Regiment, Col. WM. WARD; Second Regiment, Col. WM. ALLEN; First Regiment, Col. JAMES PECKWELL; Fire Department, Ex-Chief Engineers, Sunderhaff's Band, engine companies, Newark City Band, Committee of Arrangements of Common Council, Goddess of Liberty and thirteen young ladies, representing the thirteen original States, in a carriage; disabled and wounded veterans of the war in carriages; carriage containing Governor and Ex-Governor; carriages containing Mayor, President of Common Council, Judges of the United States Courts and members of Congress, United States Government officials, State and county officers, members of New-Jersey Legislature, Ex-Mayors of the city, invited guests, &c. The above procession marched through the principal streets to the park on Washington-street, where, after music, a prayer was offered by Rev. THOS. KILLEEN, reading of the Declaration of Independence by JOHN C. DURING, oration by NEHEMIAH PERRY, Jr., and benediction by Rev. THOMAS KILLEEN.

From early morning the principal streets of the city were densely packed with pedestrians and carriages. Several residences celebrated on their own account at the Catharine-street M. E. Church. The exercises consisted of addresses, a festival, &c.

In the evening, there was a magnificent display of fire-works, on Broad-street, in front of the market. The streets, adjacent buildings, parks, etc., were crowding with people, and it is stated that never were there more people on the streets of Newark in one day than on yesterday.

ELIZABETH.

The celebration at Elizabeth consisted of the usual salutes, a procession, which was participated in by the Fire Department, Companies A, C and E of the National Rifle Guards of New-Jersey, a number of the citizens generally, and an excellent oration in Library Hall by Rev. Dr. J. B. PATTERSON, of the Second Presbyterian Church of Elizabeth. In the evening some excellent fire-works were witnessed at the foot of East Broad-street. The procession was a very creditable one, and Elizabeth generally was very tastefully and doubly so by a very general display of the national colors from the public and private buildings. Besides the exercises above mentioned, and after them, the Firemen pienicked in Somers' Grove, and Fay's and Johnson's Groves were also occupied with merry parties. The exercises throughout the day were well arranged.

JERSEY CITY.

The city authorities of Jersey City, having made no provision for a celebration, beyond an appropriation for fire-works, the citizens were left to celebrate on their own account and in their own way. Great numbers left on every train, in the morning, for the remote regions of the "Jerseys;" others went to New-York to witness the parade, and hundreds of others departed by various brass band excursions innumerable. Those who remained listened all day to the popping and snapping of fire-crackers, torpedoes, pistols, &c., and the sober part of the community doubtless congratulated themselves that the Fourth of July comes but once a year. The day was ushered in by the firing of national salutes, ringing of church and fire bells, and the same was repeated at sunset. Two alarms of fire were rung in the afternoon, one at No. 54 York-street, in the third floor of a dwelling-house occupied by SARAH JOHNSON, but only resulted in the destruction of a feather-bed, and trifling damage to the building. A second alarm was sounded for No. 38 Newark-avenue, where the roof was slightly damaged. The fire-works in the evening were exhibited in six different places, two in each of the original divisions of the ancient Jersey City. At the corner of Varick and Grand streets, and at Hamilton Park in (old) Jersey City; at Oakland and Hoboken avenues, and at the corner of Hudson-avenue and Griffith-street in (old) Hudson City, and at Bergen-square and at Union-street in what was once Bergen, large crowds were in attendance, and watched the spectacle with great pleasure. Several very fine pieces were exhibited at the Grand-street and Hamilton Park station. Throughout the day the public, and many private buildings had the American colors flying from flag-staffs on the roof.

HOBOKEN.

The glorious Fourth was ushered in in Hoboken by a salute from a section of the Hudson County Artillery, N. G. S. N. J. The boys were already awake, and the echo of the firing awoke every one else. At 11 A. M. the Caledonian Club paraded the streets in their Highland costume, and then proceeded to enjoy a picnic at Union Hill. In the evening fire-works were exhibited at Church Park to the delight and admiration of the unconsolidated inhabitants of Hoboken. The battalion of the First National Guard State of New-Jersey paraded under command of Major HALL.

At Union Hill, fire companies from New-Durham, West Hoboken, West New-York and Union Hill paraded in line. The town authorities followed the procession in carriages, and all had dinner at Mitchell Park, where a singing society furnished songs patriotic and convival.

PATERSON.

The day was ushered in at Paterson by the firing of cannon and the ringing of bells. The Catholic societies formed in procession at 9½ A. M., and marched to the "Red Woods," headed by a New-York band, in the following order: St. Patrick, 225 members; St. John's, 125; Sons of Erin, 250; Cadets, 150, and the Sunday-school children, between 200 and 400.

THE PRESIDENT AT WOODSTOCK.

Celebration of the Fourth—Speeches by Gov. Woodford, Mr. Beecher, Gen. Butler, Gov. Hawley and the Russian Minister.

WOODSTOCK, July 4.—The day opened with a heavy fog and indications of rain. These were soon dispelled, however, and the atmosphere was clear, bright and pleasant, when at 7¼ A. M., the Presidential party started by special train from Hartford to this, the scene of the day's festivities. With the President were Gen. Porter, of his Staff; Gov. Jewell, Stewart L. Woodford, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, Gov. Hawley, Gen. Pleasonton, Hon. H. C. Ouly, the Baron Catacazy, Russian Minister; Gen. Gorloff, Wm. M. Benjamin, C. A. Bowen, E. H. Robinson, Luther Kountze, A. Clark, and a half a dozen members of the Press. A large crowd had assembled at the railroad depot to witness the departure. No manifestation was made until the President had ascended the platform of the car, when Gov. JEWELL, addressing the assembly, said:

FELLOW-CITIZENS: Allow me to present to you the President of the United States. Let us give him three cheers.

The cheers were given with the utmost enthusiasm. The President bowed his thanks, and the party entered the cars, and were soon en route to Woodstock, via the Hartford, Providence and Fishkill, and the Norwich and Worcester Railroads.

ON THE WAY TO WOODSTOCK.

At Manchester, six miles from Hartford, the citizens turned out en masse, and the depot platforms, tops of cars and other prominent places were thronged with people anxious to catch a glimpse of the President, while a band discoursed strains suited to the occasion. The train stopped for a few moments, while Gov. JEWELL introduced President GRANT to the people, who received him with loud cheers. At Vernon a similar reception took place. Here, also, Baron CATACAZY was presented. At Willimantic the reception accorded was of an imposing and enthusiastic character. Gen. HAWLEY introduced the President, the people responding with cheers and shouts of welcome, and waving of hats and handkerchiefs, which evidences of appreciation were acknowledged on the part of the President by repeated bows. Gen. HAWLEY then introduced the Russian Minister, as the representative of a nation which had shown its sympathy with us through the dark days of our late war. Baron CATACAZY was received with cheers. He remarked aside to the President that the hearty welcome accorded everywhere to Gen. GRANT reminded him (the Baron) of the manner in which the Emperor of Russia is received by his people during his journeys through the Empire. At Baltic, a small village on the route, the train stopped for a few minutes. Senator SPRAGUE, of Rhode Island, was waiting at the station with a deputation, and welcomed the President, who was received with cheers by the crowd. Again the train sped onward at the rate of forty miles an hour, the gentality of the Presidential party increasing with the manifestations of enthusiastic welcome with which they were met on the journey. The Russian Minister expressed himself as particularly gratified with what he had so far seen during this, his first visit, to New-England. At Plainfield, the next place at which the train stopped, hundreds had assembled from every part of Windham County. The fact that the train was to stop ten minutes, and that an address was to be read here to the President, doubtless had something to do with drawing together so large a concourse of people. The reception was, as at other places, of a very enthusiastic character. The President having appeared on the platform and been introduced by Gov. JEWELL to Mr. CLEVELAND, and the latter read the following address and resolutions:

ADDRESS.

MR. PRESIDENT: As Chairman of the General Committee of Reception, I have the honor of welcoming you and your distinguished suite within the borders and to the hospitalities of Windham County—a county in whose bosom rests the honored dust of PUTNAM, and LYON, and others, who fought for a free Government in the war of the revolution, and for its salvation and perpetuation in the late war of the rebellion; a county that has always been loyal to Democratic Puritan ideas, that spoke in the "Declaration of Independence" and in the "Fifteenth Amendment." We recall with pleasure and pride the fact that for nearly two hundred years Connecticut was the home of your Puritan ancestors. The people are assembling on this glorious day by tens of thousands to testify their gratitude to you, Sir, for the inestimable services you have rendered your country. May God bless you, Mr. President, with wisdom and power to lead this great people on to a still larger liberty, and a higher civilization. Again, in behalf of our citizens, we cordially welcome you and your friends to Windham County.

THE PRESIDENT'S REPLY.

Mr. CLEVELAND then introduced the President to the people, who received him with round after round of cheers.

Gen. GRANT in response said:

I thank you for this reception accorded me this morning. I feel under great obligations to the people of Connecticut and Windham County for the kind reception they have given me. I have met a warm welcome throughout my entire journey through your State, and Windham County is no exception. I thank you for this reception and am glad to be here.

EN ROUTE AGAIN.

At this point the party was reinforced by Senator BUCKINGHAM and Mayor BLACKSTONE, and a deputation from Norwich, for whose accommodation an additional car was attached to the train. The train stopped a few moments at Danielsonville, where Gov. DYER, of Providence, joined the excursion. Here, as at all the towns along the route, men, women and children gathered about the cars, peering eagerly through the open windows, anxiously inquiring, "Where is the President?"

THE PROCESSION TO WOODSTOCK.

At 9:30 o'clock A. M. the train reached Putnam, where the party were to leave the railroad and proceed to Woodstock, some four miles distant, in carriages which were held in waiting. The usual crowd and the usual reception greeted the arrival. The President and party left the cars and entered their carriages, when a procession was formed. It was headed by two posts of the Grand Army of the Republic, one from Putnam and one from Greenwich. After these, came the carriages containing the Presidential party and members of the Press. The route to Woodstock was by a road adorned throughout the whole distance with banners and festoons. The inhabitants, not only of the vicinity, but of distant towns in Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts, had turned out their hundreds, so that in this comparatively remote part of Connecticut there was presented a scene of enthusiasm and patriotism worthy of the occasion. Groups of citizens were gathered here and there along the route, and cheer after cheer resounded as the carriage containing the President passed by. Gen. GRANT rode the whole distance uncovered, and acknowledged the enthusiastic plaudits by bowing. The mottoes, "Welcome Grant," "Grant and Colfax," "We Have Peace," "Welcome to Old Woodstock," met the eye along the route. Every house was decorated and festooned. Arches extended across the road at intervals. At a handsome Catholic church on the outskirts of the village of Putnam, the congregation and school were formed in line by the roadside, the children all dressed in white. All greeted the President with hearty cheers. The procession halted a minute, when a pretty child in white was borne forward and presented the President a magnificent bouquet of flowers. This was the only actual stoppage on the route, though from time to time the procession halted momentarily to acknowledge the cheers of the people.

AT WOODSTOCK.

Arrived at Woodstock, the scene was an exceedingly animated one. Thousands of people had assembled, and vehicles of all descriptions stood by the wayside. The grounds were beautifully decorated with banners bearing the names of the leading Generals of the Union army and of the States and Territories of the Union. The procession wound its way into the ground, and the dust-stained Presidential party had a little time for rest and refreshment. Shortly after 1 o'clock the thousands around the village gathered together in a large tent erected on a common. The President and his party took their seats upon the platform. Senator BUCKINGHAM occupied the chair. On his right sat President GRANT, on whose right sat Rev. Mr. BEECH, pastor of the Congregational Church of Woodstock. To the left of the Chairman sat Baron CATACAZY, Gen. GORLOFF, Gov. JEWELL, Gen. PLEASONTON and Gen. HAWLEY, and others. Behind the Russian Minister sat Ex-Gov. WOODFORD and Gen. BUTLER. Cheer upon cheer went up as the party took their places on the platform. Senator BUCKINGHAM briefly introduced the President, who was enthusiastically received. After music by the band, the Declaration of Independence was read. Then Senator BUCKINGHAM, with brief prefacing remarks, introduced Ex-Gov. WOODFORD, who spoke substantially as follows:

GOV. WOODFORD'S SPEECH.

MR. CHAIRMAN AND CITIZENS: Grateful for the privilege of meeting you among the green hills and pleasant farms of the State wherein my fathers dwelt and died, and sensible of the distinguished presence in which I stand, let me, without further introduction, speak to you of the lessons which the occasion suggests. We meet as citizens of a free republic to celebrate our nation's birthday, to honor the memory of our patriot sires, to pledge anew our fidelity to fatherland and flag. I would speak to you then of our American citizenship, dignified by noble duties, burdened by solemn responsibilities.

THE LESSONS OF THE DAY.

After alluding to the sacrifices by which our independence was won and our national honor vindicated in later times, the speaker concluded as follows: "Independence Day comes to us now with fuller meaning and with holier joy than ever before. Since last this anniversary dawned, all the promises of the Declaration have been fulfilled, and our victories in arms have been crowned by the adoption of that amendment to the National Constitution which has removed the last stain of slavery, and which guarantees to all citizens equal protection of the laws, before the law, without regard to race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Well may the bells ring out in jubilee. Well may the cannon respond with deep-voiced amen. Well may the people rejoice, and all the nations of the earth be glad together. At last the flag of the Great Republic protects no master and floats above no slave. At last the Declaration of 1776 is in exact harmony with the Constitution of 1870. At last the law is equal master over all, and the people stand gratefully before it, equal in their rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. With returning peace and established justice, I pray that there may come into all bosoms the spirit and the purpose of a nobler and more devoted loyalty. Chastened by the holy memories of this day, let us of the North deliberately take from our hearts all bitterness and unkind recollection of the past, and lay there in our peace offering on the altar of our common country. As we were victorious in battle, let us be magnanimous in victory. From every Southern heart let all lingering disloyalty be cast, and hand in hand, under the flag of our fathers, may we walk in the appointed ways of freedom and justice. Behind us lie the common heritage, Bunker Hill, Saratoga, Valley Forge and Yorktown belong to no State or section, but to all the land. The names of WASHINGTON and ADAMS, of JEFFERSON and HAMILTON, are precious household words from Maine to the Rio Grande. And the day shall come when, not only in jubilee, lovingly calling us back to our common homes in all the Southern land, the patriotic purpose and the grand charity of the martyred LINCOLN's life shall be justly known and honored. The real interests of all this nation are today one. And that is a narrow wisdom and a false statesmanship which would seek longer in any manner to array section against section. Before us opens a future, whose possibilities of good for our children and for the oppressed of all the earth no man can in any just degree foretell. Chastened by the recollection of how grievously we have suffered as a people when we have sinned; encouraged by the recollection of how wondrously we have been led from our feeble infancy at Plymouth Rock to the development and power of this day, let us seek to know our responsibilities; let us seek, each in his place and sphere, to do our duty as citizens, praying that Heaven may always bless and shield from harm our flag and fatherland.

Mr. CLEVELAND read a series of resolutions, which were adopted by the meeting:

SPEECH OF MR. BEECHER.

Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER was then introduced, and spoke as follows:

It was arranged that Gov. WOODFORD should make the main speech upon this occasion. I was expected to do something supplementary, but when it was understood that Gen. BUTLER was coming up here, Gov. WOODFORD and I put our heads together and concluded that we should put the burden of the speaking on him. [laughter] and we have conveyed to him this information, and he has prepared himself accordingly. [Great laughter.] He laughs himself as if to turn away the force of his remarks, but he will not dare, say that on Saturday last he left New-York with us, and, after learning this fact, he sheered off home to make his preparation ever Sunday. [Laughter.] I have no doubt it will answer the expectation of all assembled here on this occasion. Fellow-citizens, I am sorry for you; but there is one other party that suffers more, and that is he who is about to speak to you. We are all miserable together this afternoon. [Laughter.] We are gathered together upon our annual patriotic boasting day; we tell what great men our fathers were, and, as like begets like, we blandly believe we to be inferior to those sons our fathers had. [Great laughter.] We read again the Declaration of Independence as we keep the old Queen ANNE's firearms over the mantel-pieces of our chimney's to show what sort of guns our fathers shot, though it be fifty years past. So we exhibit again the old copy of the Declaration of Independence, which was good at the beginning, and was good in the middle. But that was gone by long ago. What do you care and what do I care what our fathers suffered before they licked Great Britain? They settled all that long ago, and the only sound of such rehearsal on this occasion is to hear it read by a good voice. As a historical document it is interesting. I expected to hear, and was not disappointed, some allusion made to the great conflict which has recently been concluded. After all, the fighting was the least part of that business. Although Gen. GRANT is here present, behind to make a speech to you on the matter, [great laughter,] I have no doubt he thinks there was some fighting. Yet, after all, measure it as much as you please, make the diameter coequal with that of the earth's, and then double it, and it was the least part of all that was done in that great four years that elapsed; for, while we were fighting, this country was enabled to unfold an example, and to make a demonstration of Government which it never made before, and could not have been made except under some such pressure as that. Any yacht will stand weather when it is moored in New-York Harbor; put it out to sea where the tornado catches it, and then she is brought to her moorings, and she shows you how she is made and what stuff she is made of. So with a great people spread on a great continent, almost rather in abundance. Why shouldn't she be prosperous? Men said this country could not be a warlike nation. I refer you to any nation on the face of the globe, no matter how rich or extensive, who could in so short a time muster a million of soldiers as the North did, and nearly the same number in the South. When the people thus determine their laws they give them; when they determine their policy they carry it out, and when the people say war there is no other Government on the earth like a free popular Government to make an army, if you have the officers prepared. God forbid that old West Point should go down—that is your standing army. Put West Point down and you either become feeble or else you are obliged to enlist twenty thousand men to uphold the Government. Educate officers and you can dispense with the army, for it takes but a little time to discipline the men and put them into perfect organization. Educate the officers, or you must substitute for them a standing army, which is cheap, too. There is no body of men less warlike than military officers, [laughter;] therefore we are not in danger from them. I set out to make that sober, but I could not resist the temptation, though I do assure you I had not MCCLELLAN in my thoughts. [Great laughter.] We have raised a million and a half of men, and never was an army better served, better clothed and handled and better organized, just as soon as they had learned to adapt their military education to the pattern of the magnitude of this continent. And three or four years such fighting as they experienced I hope never will again be seen in this land. The conflict that has been settled could not be avoided. But, methinks, there has been enough of bloodshed, and that the sacrifice made should stand for ages before God. Well, it was predicted loudly that just as soon as our army became disbanded there would be no earthly power to restrain the ambitious officers, and there would be no peace. But the disbanded soldiery who came home with the habits of the camp. As near as I can observe, it is certain that the camp spoiled a good many boys, and it is just as certain that the camp saved as many others. A great many went into the war good, and broke down under temptation and became bad, and came home sorrow to their friends; but it is just as true that there were hundreds and thousands of lame-limbed, purposeless boys, who went into that camp—their patriotism became fired even to their fingers' ends—and they came home citizens, of whom we should feel proud. And as to the decorsalation of the army, the snow that melts on the hill-sides falls not to leave a freshet; nor is it possible for the storm which bursts over the mountains not to upturn banks and undermine some trees; but you are witnesses that in the disbandment of this army, in no city or country or town in these States was any complaint made that any one suffered by the incursion, or by the misconduct of our soldiers. [Cheers.] It is a testimony I desire to have borne over the world, that a million of American soldiers went back to the farm and shop, and no order of society, and not one law of the community tarnished by their return. It is a testimony they deserve. It is a testimony to the institutions under which they have had their training. It is said that a republican Government could never pay great debts. The bonds of such a Government could never be negotiated, and the people would not pay them if they did not [illegible] taxed. Well, I will admit that if you had studied, and got the devil to help you, (and he is a good student,) you could not have brought to bear on this American people a temptation that would be more trying. This Government was encumbered with a debt of three thousand millions of dollars, and, on its efforts to repay that debt, I looked with interest. I prophesied it would pay it. I have prophesied other things, and, let me say, that one-half of me is as good a prophet as you could find, and if you could bring up the other half, I would be better satisfied with myself. I was aboard at the time. I was aware of the people's willingness to pay a national debt incurred in maintaining the unity of the Government, and I had a personal interest in its fulfillment. And how is it now? I do not only declare that we have proved ourselves a great people, but I aver, take it man for man, that there is not such a wealth producing population on the globe as the American people. We make more money per head than any other people on the globe, and it will be joyful tidings to most of you when I say we shall continue to make it. We are a people to whom poverty is a spur, and it gets up and makes us work harder. We have the ability and the heart to do it, and when this question was made the issue between the great political parties, and when every inducement was held out to repudiate it, this people with one word sent to sever its head from its body. America wants no war. She will tolerate no foreign soldier on her soil, and she will put no soldiers on theirs. Peace for them—peace for us; for we hold that we have advanced in the life of nations to the period in which we are to share the higher grades of civilization with the nations of the earth. Let us educate the people, preserve the liberty of the people, consistently with the rights, one of the other; give full toleration in religion, give boundless freedom to commerce, freedom of thought, of sentiment, freedom of belief, freedom of trade, freedom every where, and that is abundantly sufficient for the world. Let us see to it, when carping there, (pointing to a man in the crowd,) and it puts me in peril. I will shut up. If I linger any longer, I shall give the untruth to what I said in the beginning about Gen. BUTLER, and I know already by advance that he is getting impatient at this long speech of mine; and, therefore, proud as I am to be associated with Gen. BUTLER on this platform, and joyful as I should be to stand on that platform he one day expects to reach, [laughter,] I do not think it is fair for me, as I have got a profession already and have got along pretty well in life, to stand in his way. I want him to have a fair hearing and a good chance, and I will stop now, although the most eloquent part of my speech was that which was yet to come. [Great cheering.]

Mr. BEECHER's speech being concluded, Senator BUCKINGHAM introduced, with some laudatory remarks of the Russian Government, Baron CATACAZY, the Russian Minister. Three cheers were given for the Imperial Government of Russia with enthusiasm, and the Russian Minister acknowledged the compliment by repeatedly bowing.

GEN. BUTLER'S SPEECH.

The Chairman then introduced Gen. BUTLER, who spoke as follows:

Not here to commemorate the birthday of the nation, it is fit to inquire how far the promise of its nativity, made in the declaration of human rights, this day read and renewed to so many millions of freemen, has been fulfilled in what is even now, we trust, but the very youth of the nation's life. Our Government, born in revolution against a parent State and kingly power, founded by men who, in their own person or immediate ancestry, had fled from the oppressions and religious thraldom of other lands to establish for themselves freedom and equality of right in the savage wilds of a new world, required the very severest tests to welcome us to an asylum for whoever fleeing from tyranny and the exactions of arbitrary power should prefer liberty in exile to restraints at home; and, therefore, it became its very cardinal principle that whoever came to us as our fathers came here, should become a part of us, to share with us not only the benefits of our laws, but the power which enacts them. Thus an experiment in government was begun hitherto untried in the history of the world, and has been carried on with unparalleled success until we have peopled and brought under our control an area of the globe greater than ever occupied by one Government, where all its subjects are amenable to the laws enacted by a central power, wherein all have a voice.

AMERICAN AND ROMAN CITIZENSHIP.

The peculiar individuality of our system, and which cannot be too carefully examined, is that with the extension of our powers and our civilization over this territory, we have also given to every man, from what land soever he comes and under whatsoever institutions he may have been reared, a part of the power that is the possess of governing ourselves. Rome, from a peninsular city in ancient times, by her arms, her laws, her institutions and her civilization, covered every part of the then known world. As all magnitudes are to be judged of by comparison only, we may pause here to consider that, every of the countries conquered by Roman arms, or reduced to subjection by Roman power, arranged contiguously in compact form and placed in the center of our territory, one of our swift railroad trains with its palace cars, containing more of elegance and luxury of travel than the most sybaritic of the Roman Emperors ever dreamed of, must run at the rate of twenty-five miles the hour continu-

A WAR OF RAISES IS THREATENED.—Almond-eyed Celestials are swarming in Mammoth-store, and the fame of Sol. Colyer's wax work with thereof. The great matter, however, fears no opposition. KNOX is actually at the head of fashionable affairs, and beyond the reach of rivals. Much of his taste is a brilliant illustration of the methods in art, and his exhibitions are beyond competition. The silk, straw, felt, canvas and other Summer styles of head-gear now on exhibition at No. 212 Broadway, corner of Fulton-street, are attracting universal attention and numberless purchasers.
